Sin kills the sinner and will continue to kill him as long as he sins.

MARY BAKER EDDY, Science and Health, p. 203. (1875)

The wages of sin and the reward of virtue are not so different.

JOSEPH SHEARING, The Strange Case of Lucile Cléry, p. 43. (1932)

They tell us that the wages of sin is death; we know very well that it is not always.

MAUGHAM, The Mixture as Before, p. 31. (1940)

The wages of sin is death. But no nonsense of Justice about nature. Don't trouble whether it's the real sinner who gets the wages.

H. C. BAILEY, Apprehensive Dog, p. 34. (1942)

SENECA, Agamemnon, l. 150. (c. A. D. 60)

There is a great difference between not willing, and not knowing how, to sin. (Utrum peccare aliquis nolit an nesciat.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xc, sec. 46. Because virtue depends upon reason, not upon ignorance. Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 25, the French being, "Il y a une grande différence entre ne vouloir pas et ne savoir pas faire le mal."

<sup>8</sup> He does not sin who sins without intent. (Haut est nocens quicumque non sponte est nocens.)

SENECA, Hercules Oetaeus, l. 886. (c. A. D. 60)

Take away the motive and the sin is taken away. (Quitada la causa, se quita el pecado.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 67 (1615)

What is done ignorantly is not sin. (Pu chih ché pu wei tsui.)

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1828. (1875) Germans say, "Ohne Wissen, ohne Sünde" (Without knowledge, without sin).

SENECA, Hippolytus, l. 164. (c. A. D. 60) Sins can be well-guarded, but free from anxiety they cannot be. (Tuta scelera esse possunt; securae esse non possunt.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xcvi, sec. 13. Man may securely sin, but safely never.

BEN JONSON, The Forest. Epode 11. (1616)

<sup>2</sup> He who does not forbid sin when he can, encourages it. (Qui non vetat peccare cum possit, iubet.)

SENECA, Troades, l. 291. (c. A. D. 60) "He that hinders not a mischief is guilty of it."

SISYPHUS

6 Thou, Sisyphus, either push or pursue the rock, which must always be rolling down hill again. (Aut petis aut urgues rediturum, Sisyphæ saxum.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. iv, l. 460. (A. D. 7)

To roll the stone. (Saxum volvere.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. ii, cent. iv, No. 40.

(1508) A proverb for endless and useless labor, deriving from the myth of the stone of Sisyphus.

With Sisyphus thus do I roll the stone,

And turn the wheel with damned Ixion.

MICHAEL DRAYTON, Idea. Sonnet 40. (1593)

Commonly, they that, like Sisyphus, roll this restless stone of Ambition, are in a perpetual agony.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy.

Pt. i, sec. ii, memb. iii, subs. 11. (1621)

Whate'er I plot, like Sisyphus, in vain

I heave a stone, that tumbles down again.

DRYDEN, The Conquest of Granada. Pt. i, act

iii, sc. 2. (1670)

With useless endeavor | Forever, forever,

Is Sisyphus rolling | His stone up the mountain.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 11. (1546)

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II, ii, 2, 121. (1595)

He let all things run at sixes and sevens.

THOMAS ADAMS, Sermons (1861), iii, 61. (1629)

His affairs went on at sixes and sevens.

JOHN ARBUTHNOT, John Bull, ii, i. (1712)

Haven't I good reason to be out of my senses, when I see things going at sixes and sevens?

GOLDSMITH, Good-Natured Man. Act i. (1768)

Fair moon, to thee I sing,

Bright regent of the heavens!

Say, why is everything

Either at sixes or at sevens?

W. S. GILBERT, H.M.S. Pinafore. Act ii. (1878)

SKELETON

HERODOTUS, History. Bk. ii, ch. 78. (c. 445 B. C.)

Herodotus is telling how, at Egyptian banquets, a man carried an image of a corpse around in a coffin and showed it to each of the company, with this admonition.

All the wise and good men of the world . . . chose to throw some ashes into their chalices. . . . Such was . . . the Egyptian skeleton served up at feasts.

JEREMY TAYLOR, Holy Dying. Ch.ii,sec.1.(1651)

The skeleton of ennui sat at these dreary feasts, and it was not even crowned with roses.

G. A. LAWRENCE, Guy Livingstone. Ch.3.(1857)

[She] seemed to me . . . like the skeleton which the old Egyptians placed at table, in their feasts, to be a memorial of their latter end.

JANE WELSH CARLYLE, Letter, 20 May, 1839.

Dick . . . was the skeleton at the feast of life in Brixham.

PHILPOTTS, The Haven. Bk. i, ch. 3. (1909)

<sup>9</sup> There is a skeleton in every house.

W. M. THACKERAY, Punch in the East. (1845)

Works (1886), xxvi, 112. A secret source of shame or pain.

They have a skeleton or two in their closets, as well as their neighbours.

THACKERAY, The Newcomes. Ch. 55. (1855)

Our family had a skeleton in the cupboard.

COLLINS, The Queen of Hearts, p. 62. (1859)

It is in truth a most contagious game:

Hiding the Skeleton shall be its name.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Modern Love. St. 17. (1862)

There is said to be a hidden skeleton in every house.

DICKENS, Edwin Drood. Ch. 2. (1870)

His skeleton came out of the cupboard and gibbered at him.

F. ANSTAY (T. A. GUTHRIE), The Giant's Robe. Ch. 25. (1884)

Every man—even the most cynical—has one enthusiasm. . . . If there is a skeleton—there is also an idol in the cupboard.

JOHN OLIVER HOBBS (PEARL M. T. CRAIGIE), The Ambassador. Act ii. (1892)

Every one has a black pig in his house.
Every family cooking-pot has one black spot.

HART, 700 Chinese Proverbs. Nos. 42, 43. (1937)
If you cannot get rid of the family skeleton, you may as well make it dance.

BERNARD SHAW, in PEARSON, G.B.S., p. 6.

SKEPTICISM

1 The worst speculative skeptic ever I knew was a much better man than the most superstitious devotee and bigot.

DAVID HUME, Letter to Gilbert Elliott, 10 March, 1751.

Hume, and other skeptical innovators, are vain men, and will gratify themselves at any expence. Truth will not afford sufficient food to their vanity, so they have betaken themselves to error. Truth, Sir, is a cow which will yield such people no more milk, and so they are gone to milk the bull.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. BOSWELL, Life, 21 July, 1763.
He wears his skepticism as a coquette wears her ribbons—to annoy if he cannot subdue.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp. Ch. 11. (1863)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. lxx, sec. 21. (c. A. D. 64)

10 You've got a slave-driver over you. Yes, a slave-driver.

R. H. DANA, Two Years Before the Mast, p. 128. (1840)

It is . . . worst of all when you are the slave-driver of yourself.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden, p. 10. (1854)

11 Either be wholly slaves, or wholly free.

JOHN DRYDEN, The Hind and the Panther. Pt. ii, l. 285. (1687)

I do not see how a barbarous community and a civilized community can constitute a state. I think we must get rid of slavery, or we must get rid of freedom.

R. W. EMERSON, The Assault Upon Mr Sumner's Speech, 26 May, 1856.

Our political problem now is, "Can we as a nation continue together permanently—forever—half slave and half free?" The problem is too mighty for me.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Letter to George Robertson, 15 Aug. 1855.

"A house divided against itself cannot stand." I believe this government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Speech, at Springfield, Ill., at the Republican State Convention which had made Lincoln its candidate for U.S. Senator, 16 June, 1858.

Where Slavery is, there Liberty cannot be; and where Liberty is, there Slavery cannot be.

CHARLES SUMNER, Slavery and the Rebellion. Address before the New York Young Men's Republican Union, 5 Nov., 1864.

12 If you put a chain around the neck of a slave, the other end fastens itself around your own.

EMERSON, Essays: Compensation. (1841)

13 No worse than the freeman is the slave, if he be virtuous. (τῶν ἐλευθέρων | οὐδὲν κακίων δούλος, ὅστις ἐσθλὸς ᾖ.)

EURIPIDES, Ion, l. 855. (c. 419 B. C.)

1 Good men's slaves are wont to be evil, and bad men's slaves good. (τοῖσι μὲν χρηστοῖσι τῶν ἀνθρώπων κακοὶ δούλοι φιλέουσι γίνεσθαι, τοῖσι δὲ κακοῖσι χρηστοί.)

HERODOTUS, History. Bk. viii, ch. 68. (c. 445 B. C.)

2 Slaves, when their masters lose their power, no longer give them honest service. (δμῶες δ', εὐτ' ἂν μηκέτ' ἐπικρατέωσιν ἄνακτες, | οὐκέτ' ἔπειτ' ἐθέλουσιν ἐναίσια ἐργάζεσθαι.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xvii, l. 320. (c. 850 B. C.) Zeus, whose voice is borne from afar, takes away half the worth of a man when he makes him a slave. (ἤμισιν γάρ τ' ἀρετῆς ἀποαίνυται εὐρύσπα Ζεὺς | ἀνέρος, εὐτ' ἂν μιν κατὰ δούλιον ἡμᾶρ ἔλθῃσιν.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xvii, l. 322. (c. 850 B. C.) Pope renders this, "Whatever day Makes man a slave, takes half his work away."

3 In giving freedom to the slave, we assure freedom to the free.

LINCOLN, Message to Congress, 1 Dec., 1862.

The blow that liberates the slave

But sets the master free.

JAMES JEFFREY ROCHE, Gettysburg. (1895)

4 To be a slave is enough; I'll no longer be a slave's slave. (Esse sat est servum; iam nolo vicarius esse.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. ii, No. 18. (c. A. D. 85) It is useless, believe me, to be the slave of a slave. (Non bene, crede mihi, servo servitur.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 489.

8 The distinguishing sign of slavery is to have a price, and be bought for it.

RUSKIN, Crown of Wild Olive: War. (1866)

9 Slavery enchains a few; more enchain themselves to slavery. (Paucos servitus, plures servitutem tenent.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xxii, sec. 11. (c. A. D. 64) Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 42. "Peu d'hommes sont enchaînés à la servitude; un grand nombre s'y enchaînent."

No servitude is more disgraceful than that which is self-imposed. (Nulla servitus turpior est quam voluntaria.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xlvii, sec. 17. Seneca repeats the thought in Naturales Quaestiones, bk. iii, Praefatio, "The most degrading slavery is to be slave to oneself."

10 Wall-eyed slave.

SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus, v, 1, 44. (1593)

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, ii, 2, 576. (1600)

11 Disguise thyself as thou wilt, still, Slavery! said I,—still thou art a bitter draught!

LAURENCE STERNE, A Sentimental Journey: The Passport: The Hotel at Paris. (1768)

12 Slavery degrades men so much that it makes them love it. (La servitude abaisse les hommes jusqu'à s'en faire aimer.)

15 Let not sleep which charms the soul be on your eyes. (ὕπνος δ' ἀπέστω γλυκύθυμος ὀμμάτων.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Clouds, l. 705. (423 B. C.)

16 When they are asleep you cannot tell a good man from a bad one, whence the saying that for half their lives there is no difference between the happy and the miserable. (ὄθεν φασὶν οὐδὲν διαφέρειν τὸ ἡμῖσι τοῦ βίου τοὺς εὐδαίμονας τῶν ἀθλίων.)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. i, ch. 13, sec. 13. (c. 335 B. C.)

While we are asleep we are all equal. (Mientras se duerme, todos son iguales.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 43. (1615)

In sleep, what difference is there between Solomon and a fool?

H. G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 424. (1855)

17 To sleep the sleep of Endymion. (Ἐνδυμίωνος ὕπνον καθεύδεις.)

ARISTOTLE, Fragment. (c. 350 B. C.) The attribution is by ZENOBIOUS, Adagia, iii, 76. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, ix, 63, with the Latin, "Endymionis somnum dormire." Endymion, the most beautiful of men, was loved by Selene (the Moon), who threw him into a perpetual sleep, and descended every night to embrace him. A similar proverb is, "Ultra Epimenidem dormire" (To sleep longer than Epimenides), a legendary Cretan prophet who fell asleep as a boy and remained asleep for fifty-seven years. The American equivalent is, of course, "To sleep longer than Rip Van Winkle."

Or snorted we in the Seven Sleepers' den?

JOHN DONNE, The Good-Morrow. (1633)

The whole French people . . . bounce up . . . like amazed Seven-sleepers awakening.

CARLYLE, The French Revolution. Vol. ii, bk. iii, ch. 1. (1837)

The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus, who had been slumbering two hundred years in a cavern of Mount Celion, . . . had . . . turned themselves on their left sides.

S. BARING-GOULD, Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, p. 101. (1869) The legend of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus tells how seven noble youths of Ephesus in A.D. 250, fled the Decian persecution to a cave in Mount Celion, where they slept for 195 years. They died soon after awaking, and their bodies were taken to Marseilles in a large stone coffin, which is still shown there in St. Victor's church.

5 To watche in the Moone, and sleepe in the Sonne, is neither profite nor honour. (Vegliar à la luna, e dormire al sole, non fa ne profito, ne honore.)

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 33. (1578)

6 How much more than is necessary do we spend in sleep? forgetting that the sleeping fox catches no poultry.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1758.

There will be sleeping enough in the Grave.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1758.

Perhaps a parody of an old saying, "Thou shalt sorrow enough in Hell," derived from a tale very popular with medieval theologians, and included in Gesta Romanorum, of a man who sorrowed greatly for his sins, but was tempted to desist by devils, who whispered constantly in his ear, "Don't waste time sorrowing now; thou shalt sorrow enough in Hell."

7 He sleepeth not, but only shutteth his eyes in dogsleap.

THOMAS FULLER, Mixt Contemplations, (1830),
p. 269. (1660)

He was wont to sleep much in the House [of Commons] (at least dog-sleepe).

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 881. (1640)

The French have the same saying, "Dormir une heure avant minuit vaut mieux que trois après."

One hour's sleep before midnight's worth two hours after.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 37. (1670)

As experience it self shews, one hour's rest before twelve of the clock is worth two after.

PECK, Desiderata Curiosa, p. 226. (1731)

It is said by the country-people that one hour's sleep before midnight is worth more than two are worth after midnight; and this I believe to

LUCILIUS, Satires, Bk. vi, frag. 251 Loeb. (c. 123 B. C.) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vi, 4, and by many others. A proverb which seems to have arisen from a certain Cippius, nicknamed Pararhenchon (Alongside-snorer), who pretended to be asleep while his wife conducted her amours in his presence with influential guests, but who woke up, with this remark, when one of his slaves, thinking him asleep, attempted to steal a piece of silver. Erasmus, however, attributes the saying to Galba, who had obligingly fallen asleep when the rich Maecenas started to toy with Madame Galba, but woke when a slave tried to steal his wine-cup.

It was Cippius, I believe, who once said, "I am not asleep to everybody." (Cippius, opinor, olim. non omnibus dormio.)

CICERO, Ad Familiares. Bk. vii, epis. 24, sec. 1. (45 B. C.) Cicero also quotes the phrase in Ad Atticum, bk. xiii, epis. 49.

To you, Mattus, I am asleep. (Dormio, Matte, tibi.)

MARTIAL (?), Epigrams: To Mattus. (c. A. D. 85) Well trained to keep his eyes on the ceiling, or to snore with wakeful nose over his cups. (Doctus spectare lacunar, | doctus et ad calicem vigilantiter sternere naso.)

JUVENAL, Satires. No. i, l. 56. (c. A. D. 120)

While his wife dallies with her paramour

Some sleepe not at all: and I watch not to euery-one.

GABRIEL HARVEY, Works, ii, 165. (1593)

Even as that Galba, who bestowed a supper on Mecnas, perceiving him and his wife beginne to bandy eie-trickes and signes, of civility shrunke downe upon his cushion, as one oppressed with sleepe; to give better scope unto their love; which he avouched as prettily: for at that instant, a servant of his presuming to lay hands on the plate which was on the table, he cried outright to him, How now, Varlet? Seest thou not I sleepe only for Mecnas? (Comment, coquin, veois tu pas que je ne dors que pour Mecnas?)

SCOTT, Familiar Letters, ii, iii. (1821)

<sup>11</sup> Now this was the guise in which the messengers journeyed: one sleeve was on the cap of each of them in front, as a sign that they were messengers, in order that through what hostile land soever they might pass, no harm might be done them.

UNKNOWN, The Mabinogion: The Dream of Mayen Wledig. (c. 1350) Lady Guest, tr.
Without the sleeve, they would have been unable to perform their errand. Consequently a sleeveless errand is one that is bootless, leading nowhere.

He tooke in hande
To make to my house a sleeueless errande.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 7. (1546)
His prince made small account of him, to send him on such a slevelesse errand.

HOLINSHED, Chronicles, iii, 284. (c. 1580)
Send that Greekish whoremasterly villain . . .

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 4, 9.
(1601) Shakespeare's only use of "sleeveless." In frequent use by other writers.

SLIP

Pardon the slip of that man's pen.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Letter, to Ormonde, 7 Oct.,
1650. The Latin phrase is, "Lapsus calami."
In Matters so sacred there is Danger in a Slip of the Tongue. (Lapsus linguae.)

NATHAN BAILY, tr., Erasmus' Colloquia
(1733), p. 334. (1725)

Things once committed to writing are secure from slips of memory. (Lapsus memoriae.)

117. (1875)

4

He slipped up somehow

On each thing that he struck.

BRET HARTE, Dow's Flat. (1856)

He [Odysseus] spoke, and aimed a bitter arrow at Antinous. Now he was on the point of raising to his lips a fair goblet, a two-eared cup of gold, and was even now handling
it. that he might drink of the wine, and death was not in his thoughts. . . . But Odysseus took aim, and smote him with an arrow in the throat, . . . and the cup fell from his hand as he was smitten. (δέπας δὲ οἱ ἔκπεσε χειρὸς βλημένου.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xxii, ll. 8-18. (c. 850 B. C.)
It seems to the compiler that this passage, rather than the mythical story of Ancaeus, as told below, may well have been the source of "There's many a slip," etc.

Nowadays they say that the standing-grain, still in the blade, is a good harvest. Do not count too much upon it. I have often heard that many things may come between the mouth and the morsel. (Saepe audiui inter os atque offam multa intervenire posse.)

MARCUS CATO, De Aedilibus Vitio Creatis. (c.
175 B. C.) As quoted by AULUS GELLIUS, bk.
xiii, ch. 18. "Inter os et offam" is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, v, 2.

Between the slaying and the offering, as they say.
(Inter caesa et porrecta, ut aiunt.)

CICERO, Ad Atticum. Bk. v, epis. 18. (51 B. C.)
As Solomon said in his time, between the mouth and the spoon there is often a great obstacle.

(Que Salemon dist en son tens

Qu'entre la bouche et la cuillier

Avient sovent grant encombrer.)

UNKNOWN, De l'Oue au Ahapelein, l. 61. (c.
1250) See MONTAIGLON, Fabliaux, vi, 47.

Manye thynges fall between the cuppe and the mouth. (Multa cadunt inter calicem, supremaque labra.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. v, No. 1. (1523)

TAVERNER, tr., fo. 16. Erasmus in explaining the origin of the proverb, tells the story of Ancaeus, son of Neptune, who, while planting a vineyard was warned by a diviner (or by a slave whom he had treated cruelly), that he would never live to taste its wine.
Time passed, the vineyard prospered, until one day Ancaeus, goblet in hand, was to taste for the first time the wine the vineyard had yielded. He recalled the prophecy, derided the seer (or the slave), and raised the cup to his lips. But at that moment, a messenger burst in with the news that a wild boar was ravaging the vineyard, and Ancaeus, hastily putting down the untasted cup, seized his spear, and rushed out to slay the boar, only to be himself slain by the furious beast. The story is also told by Pausanias, and has been repeated by many collectors of proverbs.
ARCHER TAYLOR, The Proverb, p. 42, remarks that "Since this is merely the widely-known story of Attis, it is probable that it has no connection with the proverb." The Greek form, as given by PALLADAS, Greek Anthology, bk. x, epig. 32, is, πολλὰ μεταξύ πέλει κύλικος, καὶ χεῖλεος ἄκρου.

Many things happen (according to the proverb) betweene the cup and the lippe.

WILLIAM LAMBARDE, A Perambulation of Kent,
p. 422. (1576)

Many thinges (as the sayinge is) happen betweene the cup and the lip, many thinges chaunce betweene the bourde and the bed.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 179. (1576)
The second phrase original with Pettie.

Many things fall betweene the cup and the lippe.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 471. (1580)
See also GREENE, Perimedes. (1588) JONSON.

Between hand and mouth the sog gets lost. (De la mano á la boca se pierde la sopa.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 22. (1605)

What Cervantes actually wrote was, "Les yelan las migas entre la boca y la mano"

(They let the crumbs freeze between the mouth and the hand), undoubtedly with the proverb in mind.

Many things happen between the cup and the lip.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy.

Rohesia. (1840) The first use of the proverb in exactly its modern form discovered by the compiler. In frequent use thereafter.

Between the mouth and spoon much can interfere. (Entre bouche et cuillier, Vient bien encombrer.)

LE ROUX DE LINCY, Proverbes Français. Vol i, p. 210. (1859) Cited from a manuscript of the 13th century. There are several other

French forms: "Entre la bouche et le cuillier vient bien souvent grant destourbe"; "De la main à la bouche perd souvent la soupe"

(From the hand to the mouth the soup is often lost); "Entre la bouche et le verre, |

Le vin souvent tombe à terre" (Between the mouth and the glass, the wine often falls to the ground); "Entre la main et la bouche, plus d'un morceau reste au chemin" (Between the hand and the mouth, more than one morsel remains on the road).

There is said to be "many a slip between the cup and the lip," but it would be well for some of our young men, and old ones too, if there were a good many more.

- <sup>5</sup> The slow catches the swift. (κίχάνει τοι βραδύς ὠκύς.)
HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. viii, l. 329. (c. 850 B.C.)
"Even now as Hephaestus," Homer continues, "slow though he is, has outstripped Ares, for all that he is the swiftest of the gods who hold Olympus. Lame though he is, he has caught him by craft." Hephaestus (Vulcan) had thrown an iron net over his faithless wife Aphrodite and Ares (Mars), when he caught them in bed together. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vii, 66, with the Latin, "Veloce[m] tardus assequitur," and included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, fo. 63, with the rendering, "The slowe ouertaketh the swyfte."
- The hare was outrun by the tortoise. (δασύποδα λαγών παραδραμεῖται χελώνη.)
AESOP, Fables. Halm, 420. (c. 550 B.C.) A proverb deriving from the well-known fable of the hare who was so sure of winning the race that he stopped to take a nap, while the tortoise plodded on and won.
- The crab catches the hare. (καρκῖνος λαγῶν ἀίρει.)
DIOGENIANUS, Adagia, v, 96. (A.D. 125) ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iv, 78, gives the Latin as "Cancer leporem capit," and explains that it is a proverb of absurdity, as though one would say that the most ignorant was superior to the learned. In the compiler's opinion, however, it is merely another expression of the idea that the race is not always to the swift.

SNAKE

See also Serpent

- <sup>8</sup> To warm a snake in your bosom. (δφιν ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ θάλπειν.)
AESOP, Fables: The Snake and the Rustic. Halm 95. (c. 570 B. C.) The fable relates how a rustic found a snake in winter time, almost dead with cold, and took it into his house and warmed it in his bosom and on the hearth. As soon as the snake recovered, it rewarded its rescuer by biting him. The victim, dying, said, "I have suffered justly, for I took pity on the wicked." The classical example of ingratitude. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, iv, ii, 40, who gives the Latin, "Serpentum in sinu fovere."
He carried and nourished in his breast a snake, tender-hearted against his own interest. (Colubram sustilit | sinuque fovet, contra se ipse misericors.)

SNEEZING

- <sup>2</sup> You must not sneeze. . . . If the violence of the pulse breaks some blood-vessel, you must break the blood-vessel—but not sneeze.
FRANCIS BURNES, Letter to Esther Burnes, 17
Dec., 1785, directing her how to cough, sneeze, and move before the King and Queen.
There are conditions under which even the most majestic person is obliged to sneeze.
GEORGE ELIOT, Middlemarch. Ch. 62. (1872)
- <sup>3</sup> If you sneeze on Monday, you sneeze for danger;
Sneeze on a Tuesday, kiss a stranger;
Sneeze on a Wednesday, sneeze for a letter;
Sneeze on a Thursday, something better;
Sneeze on a Friday, sneeze for sorrow, Sneeze on a Saturday, see your sweetheart tomorrow.
J. O. HALLIWELL, Nursery Rhymes of England,
p. 29. (1842) HARLAND AND WILKINSON,
Lancashire Legends, p. 68, cite the above and add two lines:
Sneeze on a Sunday, your safety seek,
The Devil will have you the whole of the week.
Another version is given by DYER, *English
Folk-Lore*, p. 239:
Sneeze on Sunday morning fasting,
You'll enjoy your own true love to everlasting.
- <sup>4</sup> Telemachus sneezed loudly, and all the room round about echoed wondrously. (Τηλέμαχος δὲ μέγ' ἔπτειρεν, ἀμφὶ δὲ δῶμα | σμερδαλέον κονάβησε.)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls. No. xviii, l. 16. (c. 270 B. C.)
The belief that a sneeze is a sign of good luck is a very ancient one.
Love on the left, as before on the right, sneezed goodwill. (Amor, sinistra, ut ante | dextra, sternuit approbationem.)
CATULLUS, Odes. Ode xlv, l. 8. (c. 57 B. C.)
Will you demand of me, whence this custom aris-eth, to bless and say God help to those that sneeze? We produce three sorts of wind: that issuing from below is too undecent; that from the mouth implieth some reproach of gourman-dise; the third is sneezing: and because it cometh from the head, and is without imputation, we thus kindly entertain it. Smile not at this subtlety; it is (as some say) Aristotle's.

KAUFMAN AND HART, The Man Who Came to Dinner. Act ii. (1936)

SOBRIETY

<sup>1</sup> And he that will go to bed sober
Falls like the leaf still in October.

JOHN FLETCHER, The Bloody Brother. Act ii,
sc. 2. (c. 1622)

He who goes to bed, and goes to bed sober,
Falls as the leaves do, and dies in October;
But he who goes to bed, and goes to bed mellow,
Lives as he ought to do, and dies an honest fellow.

UNKNOWN, An amplification of Fletcher's song, which was for a time a popular glee.
Often drunk, and seldom sober,
Falls like the Leaves in October.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6219. (1732)

<sup>2</sup> A sober man, a soft answer.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 7. (1659)

<sup>3</sup> I, for my part, can do nothing when sober.
(Possum nil ego sobrius.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. xi, ep. 6. (c. A. D. 93)
It is not better to be drunk than sober, but it is happier.

SHAW, Great Catherine. Sc. 1. (1913)

<sup>4</sup> The gods love sobriety. (τοὺς δὲ σώφρονας θεοὶ φιλοῦσι.)

SOPHOCLES, Ajax, l. 132. (c. 409 B. C.)

We all commend sobriety, and after a certain sort refuse and flie from it . . . "Like to those Akornes which, Avoyding, all the world doth honour evermore."

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk iv,
p. 139. (1574)

<sup>5</sup> I would appeal to Philip, but to Philip sober.
(Provocarem ad Philippum, sed sobrium.)

VALERIUS MAXIMUS, facta et Dicta Memorabilia. Bk. vi, ch. 2. (c. A. D. 15) As Valerius tells the story, Philip of Macedon, sitting in judgment after dinner one day, pronounced an unjust sentence against an old woman, "I appeal!" she cried. "To whom?" Philip asked. "To Philip when sober," she answered.
Philip allowed the appeal, and when he had sobered up, reversed the sentence. The incident passed into a proverb, "To appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober." See also BACON, Apophthegms. No. 158.

Our appeal is not to men in the flush of excitement, but to them in their hours of solitary sane reflection. It is from "Philip drunk to Philip sober."

ALEXANDER MACLAREN, Exposition: Deuteronomy-I Samuel, p. 49. (1906)

<sup>6</sup> I thought myself as sober as a judge.

UNKNOWN, Terence Made English, p. 82. (1694)

II—Society: The Upper Crust

<sup>9</sup> It was none of your skim-milk parties, but superfine uppercrust.

T. C. HALIBURTON (SAM SLICK), The Clock-maker. Ser. i, ch. 28. (1835)

Peel, Stanley, Graham . . . they are all uppercrust here.

T. C. HALIBURTON, Sam Slick in England. Ch. 24. (1843)

Fetch him to an upper-crust London party.

T. C. HALIBURTON, The Attaché. (1843) There seems little doubt that Haliburton was the inventor of the phrase.

Those families, you know, are our upper crust, not upper ten thousand.

COOPER, Ways of the Hour. Ch. 6. (1850)

I've got a little feelin', ef I ain't one of the upper crust.

MARY E. WILKINS, A New England Nun, p. 124. (1891)

pull off his Spurs.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Ambition. (1597)

Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, ii, 7, 149. (1600)
Ambition, the soldier's virtue.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, iii, 1, 22.

fortune as to ruine men of fortune.

ROBERT BOYLE, Some Considerations Touching the Style of the Holy Scriptures, p. 186. (1661) Every warrior may in some sense be said to be a soldier of fortune.

ROBERT SOUTH, Sermons (1823), i, 212. (1685)
During the frequent wars which occurred in Italy, before the military profession became so generally prevalent in Europe, it was usual for men of enterprise and reputation to offer their services to the different states. . . . Under the title of soldiers of fortune they [afterwards] sought for employment in every country or state that would pay them.

CHARLES JAMES, Military Dictionary: Soldiers of Fortune. (1802)

<sup>4</sup> Train up the young men to be soldiers.

KHATI I, KING OF EGYPT, Teaching How to Live. No. xiv. (c. 2500 B.C.) Budge, tr.

I did not raise my boy to be a soldier.

ALBERT BRYAN. Title and refrain of song. (1914)

Very popular at first, but as the sympathy of the country swung to the allies, there was a reaction, and in 1917, Bryan wrote another entitled, It's time for ev'ry boy to be a soldier. Then came a flood of patriotic melodies.

Dear God, I raised my boy to be a soldier;
I tried to make him strong of will and true.

FLORENCE EARLE COATES, A Soldier. (1917)

The man who has not raised himself to be a soldier, and the woman who has not raised her boy to be a soldier for the right, neither one of them is entitled to citizenship in the Republic.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, to the soldiers at Camp Upton. (1917) However the wise old our cavalry . . . she does not know how to treat a doughboy.

MRS. GEORGE A. CUSTER, Letter, March, 1867.
A doughboy originally was a flour or cornmeal dumpling. Mrs. Custer states that "early in the Civil War the term was applied to the large globular brass buttons on the infantry uniform, from which it passed, by a natural transition, to the infantrymen themselves."

<sup>10</sup> When soldiers run away in battle, they never blame themselves; they blame their general

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. i, p. 19. (1574) Pettie, tr.

1 Who so leaveth the civile society to place himselfe in some solitarie desert, taketh as it were the forme of a beast, and in a certaine manner putteth uppon him selfe a brutishe nature.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. i, p. 30. (1574) Pettie, tr.

Whosoever is delighted in solitude, is either a wilde Beast, or a God.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Friendship. (1597)

Of this apothegm, Bacon says, "It had beene hard to have put more Truth and untruth together in few Words."

To live in solitude one must be very much a god or wholly a wild beast. (Para vivir á solas ha de tener, ó mucho de Dios ó todo de bestia.)

BALTASAR GRACIAN, Oráculo Manual. Máxim 133. (1647) But in Máxim 137 Gracian says, "He that can live alone resembles the brute beast in nothing, the sage in much, and God in everything."

A solitary Man is either a Brute or an Angel

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 418. (1732)

Man if he lives alone is either a god or a devil (Homo solus aut deus aut daemon.)

ALFRED HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 155. (1869) Quoted by BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy.

2 Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men; that I might leave my people and go from them! (Quis dahet me in solitudine diversorium viatorum, et derelinquam populum meum, et recedam ab eis?)

Old Testament: Jeremiah, ix, 2. (c. 700 B. C.)

Oh for a lodge in some vast wilderness.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. ii, l. 1. (1784)

3 Solitude excludes pleasure, and does not always secure peace.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Letter to Mrs. Aston, 17 Nov., 1767.

I could bear sickness better if I were relieved from solitude.

JOHNSON, Letter to Boswell, 24 Dec., 1783.

4 God has created man for fellowship, and not for solitariness.

Now the New Year reviving old Desires,

The thoughtful Soul to Solitude retires.

FITZGERALD, tr., Rubáiyát. St. 4. (1859)

6 Solitude sometimes is best societie,

And short retirement urges sweet returne.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ix, l. 249. (1667)

The modern proverb is, "Solitude is often the best society." The Italians say, "Meglio è solo che mal accompagnato" (Solitude is better than bad company).

Society than solitude is worse,

And man to man is still the greatest curse.

ANNA L. BARBAULD, Ovid to His Wife. (1773)

Solitude is very sad,

Too much company twice as bad.

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, Blackberries. (1857)

Solitude is impracticable, and society fatal.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude. (1870)

Solitude is as needful to the imagination as society is wholesome for the character.

LOWELL, Among My Books: Dryden. (1870)

7 Solitude begets whimsies.

MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU, Letter to James Stuart, 19 July, 1759.

Solitude is dangerous to reason, without being favourable to virtue. . . . Remember that the solitary mortal is certainly luxurious, probably superstitious, and possibly mad.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (c. 1776) See Miscellanies. i, 219.

Solitude affects some people like wine; they must not take too much of it, for it flies to the head.

MARY COLERIDGE, Gathered Leaves, p. 223 (a. 1907)

8 O blessed solitude! O sole blessedness. (O beata solitudo! O sola beatitudo.)

CORNELIUS MUYS, Solitudo. (1566)

I praise the Frenchman, his remark was shrewd—

How sweet, how passing sweet is solitude!

But grant me still a friend in my retreat,

Whom I may whisper—Solitude is sweet.

COWPER, Retirement, l. 739. (1781) Cowper is quoting LA BRUYÈRE.

9 Self-conceit is always the companion of solitude. (ἡ δ' αὐθάδεια ἐρημία σύνοικος.)

PLATO, Letter to Dio. Epistles, bk. iv, sec. 321B. (c. 345 B. C.) Quoted by PLUTARCH, Moralia, 808D, and in his Life of Coriolanus, ch. 15, sec. 4.

Solitude would ripen a plentiful crop of despots.

EMERSON, Nominalist and Realist. (1844)

10 If a man be a coxcomb solitude is his best school, and if he be a fool it is his best sanctuary.

ALEXANDER POPE, Letter to William Wycherley, 26 Oct., 1705.

11 Solitude is within us.

7 Some people resemble popular songs which are only sung for a certain time. (Il y a des gens qui ressemblent aux vaudevilles, qu'on ne chante qu'un certain temps.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 211. (1665)

He play'd an ancient ditty, long since mute, In Provence call'd "La belle dame sans mercy."

JOHN KEATS, The Eve of St. Agnes. St. 33.

(1819) The "ancient ditty," La Belle Dame sans Merci, is by Alain Chartier (c. 1425). A translation of this suggested to Keats his own poem of the same title, written while he was working on The Eve of St. Agnes.

8 Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace. (Nunc dimittis servum tuum Domine.)

New Testament: Luke, ii, 29. (c. A. D. 65) The first words of the Song of Simeon, declaring glad release from life. Afterwards extended to mean welcome release from some employment.

I should cheerfully sing my Nunc dimittis.

SIR FRANCIS NETHERSOLE, Considerations Upon Affairs, p. 8. (1642)

When these things are once completed, I shall . . . sing my nunc dimittis, return to my farm.

JOHN ADAMS, Works (1854), ix, 391. (1776)

I am now contented, and can sing my nunc dimittis.

CHARLES R. DARWIN, Life and Letters. Vol. ii, p. 232. (1859)

9 Song is man's sweetest joy. (ἄριστος ἡδίστος αἰδέειν.)

MUSAEUS. (c. 900 B. C.) A semi-legendary poet quoted by ARISTOTLE, Politics, viii, 5, 2.

Of all a God's prerogatives song is the fairest. (γέραν δὲ θεοῖς κάλλιστον δοῖται.)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls, xxii, 223. (c. 270 B. C.)

Dear melodious song, the sweetest physic in the world. (τὰν γλυκερὰν μολπὰν, τὰς φάρμακον διόν οὐδέν.)

BION, Love and Song. Frag. 14. (c. 120 B. C.)

10 Songs spring forth web-like from a mind at peace. (Carmina proveniunt animo deducta sereno.)

OVID, Tristia. Bk. i, No. i, l. 39. (c. A. D. 9) The Germans say, "Froher Sinn singt gern" (Happy mood sings well).

11 Give, in return for old wine, a new song. (Redde cationem, veteri pro vino novam.)

PLAUTUS, Stichus. Act v, sc. 6, l. 8. (c. 200 B. C.)

The Latin proverb, "Cuius regio, eius religio" is the basis of the English, "Whose bread I eat, his song I sing."

What gifts shall I give you, what gifts, in reward for such a song? (Quae tibi, quae tali reddam pro carmine dona?)

VERGIL, Eclogues. Ecl. v, l. 81. (37 B.C.)

What! all this for a song?

WILLIAM CECIL, LORD BURLEIGH, to Queen Elizabeth, when ordered to give £100 to Edmund Spenser, in recognition of his poetry. (c. 1590) Burleigh was Lord High Treasurer. See BIRCH, Life of Spenser, p. xiii.

I know a man sold a goodly manor for a song.

SHAKESPEARE, All's Well that Ends Well, iii, 2, 10. (1602)

I bought it for a song.

JOHN CROWNE, Regulus. Act iii, sc. 1. (1694)

Hence comes the common saying, and commoner practice, of parting with money for a song.

SWIFT, A Tale of a Tub. Sec. 9. (1704)

The cost would be a trifle—an "old song."

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xvi, st. 59. (1824)

[He] purchased "for an old song" some barren land.

LYTTON, The Caxtons. Pt. xvii, ch. 4. (1849)

To buy for an old song. To buy very cheaply

ERIC PARTRIDGE, Dictionary of Clichés: Buy. (1941)

As vinegar upon nitre, so is he that singeth songs to an heavy heart. (Acetum in nitro, qui cantat carmina cordi pessimo.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxv, 20. (c. 350 B.C.)

With their mouth thei sing,

Though thei wepe in their hart.

UNKNOWN, Queene Hester, p. 19. (1561)

Many a one sings that is full sorry.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Chanter. (1611)

2
They are like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear; Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely. (Sicut aspidis surdae, et obturantibus aures suas.)

Old Testament: Psalms, lviii, 4-5. (c. 450 B.C.)

He little knows into what deaf ears he pours his parable. (Ne ille haud scit nunc surdo narret fabulam.)

TERENCE, Heauton Timorumenos, l. 222. (163 B.C.)

The proverbial form, "Surdo fabulam naras" is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, iv, 87, who also notes another, "Frustra canis" (You sing in vain).

We sing to deaf ears. (Canimus surdis.)

VERGIL, Eclogues. Ecl. x, l. 8. (37 B.C.) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, iv, 87, who explains that the meaning is that the ears are deaf because of prejudice.

They sang to me, but I was deaf. They bared their bosoms, but I was blind. (Cantabant surdo, nudabant pectora caeco.)

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. iv, eleg. 8, l. 47. (c. 25 B.C.) Propertius is describing a game of dice. "While I sought for sixes, ever the ruinous aces turned up. They sang to me," etc., which has a very modern flavor.

He would suppose that they were telling their tale to a deaf ass. (Narrare putaret asello fabellam surdo.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 1, l. 199. (c. 15

B.C.) Horace varies the proverbial saying, "Surdo fabellam narrare," remembering the Greek one, ὄψω τις ἔλεγε μῦθον· ὃ δὲ τὰ ὦτα ἐκίλει (A man told his story to an ass, but the ass only shook his ears).

To sing to deaf ears. (Ad surdas aures cantare.)

OVID, Amores. Bk. iii, eleg. 7, l. 61. (c. 13 B.C.)

He sings at a deaf man's door.

THOMAS DRAXE, Bibliotheca, p. 38. (1633)

3

I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living. (Placebo Domino in regione vivorum.)

Old Testament: Psalms, cxvi, 9. (c. 350 B.C.)

The uerthe zenne is thet huanne hi alle zingeth 'Placebo,' thet is to zigge: 'mi lhord zayth zoth, mi lhord deth wel.'

DAN MICHEL, Ayenbite of Inwytt, p. 60. (1340)

Flaterers been the deueles Chapelleyens that syngen euere Placebo.

CHAUCER, The Persones Tale. Sec. 40. (c. 1386)

To sing Placebo, to play the sycophant. to be servile.

By the mas, me thynke they are syngyng of placebo.

JOHN BALE, Kynge Johan, p. 30. (c. 1540)

He cannot bear fire in one hand and water in the other. He cannot play placebo.

THOMAS BECON, Early Works, p. 276. (1542)

He is too much addicted to the placebo.

WALTER SCOTT, Letters, 12 Nov., 1816.

He could have sung well before he broke his left shoulder with whistling.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 82. (1678)

Thou singest like a bird called a swine.

5

I must myself sing small in her company.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Sir Charles Grandison, i, 120. (1753)

Sing small. To be humbled, confounded, or abashed.

FRANCIS GROSE, A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue: Sing. (1785)

Sing low about this fighting business.

C. H. SMITH, Bill Arp, p. 47. (1866)

Tin Pan Alley.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD. Title of an article on the music publishing business written by Rosenfeld for a New York newspaper about 1892. See GOLDBERG, Tin Pan Alley, p. 173. Robert H. Duiree, a theatrical man who died at Carmel, Cal., 5 Oct., 1935, also claimed to have originated the phrase.

The sweet psalmist of Israel. (Egregius psaltes Israel.)

Old Testament: II Samuel, xxiii, 1. (c. 600 B.C.)

Referring to David.

And the angel Israfel, who has the sweetest voice of all God's creatures.

GEORGE SALE, tr., The Koran: Preliminary Discourse. (1734)

Sweet as the angel Israfel's.

THOMAS MOORE, Lalla Rookh. Pt. viii, l. 419.

In Heaven a spirit doth dwell

Whose heart-strings are a lute;

None sing so wildly well
As the angel Israfil.

EDGAR ALLAN POE, Israfil. (c. 1830) Poe wrongly attributes Sale's sentence to The Koran in a note attached to his poem, though he must have got it either from Sale or from Moore. Moore, in a note, gives the correct attribution to Sale. The interpolated phrase, "Whose heart-strings are a lute," appears neither in The Koran, in Sale, nor in Moore, and is probably Poe's own. It was appropriated, together with many other of Poe's phrases, by Thomas Holley Chivers, a Georgia physician and mediocre versifier, who accused Poe of stealing them from him. See WOODBERRY, Life of Poe, i, 180.

1 Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking or spitting or saying we are hoarse?

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, v, 3, 11. (1600)
When a musician has forgot his note, he makes as though a crum stuck in his throat.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 108. (1639)
RAY, p. 123; FULLER, No. 6471. From the old Greek proverb, ἀπορία ψάλτου βήξ (The musician covers his mistake with a cough).

All good singers have colds.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. i. (1738)

2 Warble, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, iii, 1, 1.
(1595)

She will sing the savageness out of a bear.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello, iv, 1, 198. (1605)

To sing a song that old was sung.

SHAKESPEARE (?), Pericles: Act i, Prelude, l.
1. (1608)

Stretched metre of an antique song.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xvii. (1609)

3 That strain again! it had a dying fall.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night, i, 1, 4. (1599)

Mister Jefferson Lord, play that barber shop chord.

That soothing harmony, it makes an awful, awful hit with me.

WILLIAM TRACEY, *Play that Barber Shop
Chord* (c. 1910)

Anyone familiar with quartet singing knows "barber shop swipes" by ear. Those harmonies, generally moving in opposite directions while the melody stands still.

SIGMUND SPAETH, Barber Shop Ballads: Preface. (1925)

4 He that sings once, weeps all his life after.

THOMAS SHELTON, tr., Don Quixote. Pt. i, bk.
iii, ch. 8. (1612)

He that sings on Friday will weep on Sunday.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 413. (1640)

The French proverb saith, They that laugh on Friday, shall cry on Sunday.

FULLER, Fast Sermon on Innocents' Day. (1642)

If you sing before breakfast, you'll cry before night.

Notes and Queries, i, xi, 416. (1855)

5 I would rather be remembered by a song than by a victory.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp: Men of Letters. (1863)

6 You sing the same old song. (Cantilenam eandem canis.)

TERENCE, Phormio, l. 495. (161 B.C.) A Latin rendering of the Greek proverb, τὸ αὐτὸ ᾄδεις ᾄσμα. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, v, 76.
Many folkes . . . syngge allwaye oon songe lyke
the cuckowe.

UNKNOWN, Dialogues of Creatures. (c. 1535)

9 My soul is the Souls of the Eternal Gods, and my body is Everlastingness.

ANI, Papyrus: Book of the Dead. Ch. lxxxv, l. 9. (c. 4000 B.C.) The phrase is repeated in l. 15.

10 Shake off the salt and throw the meat to the dog.

Babylonian Talmud: Niddah, fo. 31a. (c. 450)

When the soul—the preservative of the flesh —leaves the body, what remains is worthless.

If you take away the salt you may throw the flesh to the dogs.

JOHN RAY, Adagia Hebraica, p. 402. (1678)

- <sup>1</sup> The body is the scabbard of the soul.
Babylonian Talmud: Sanhedrin, fo. 108a. (c. 450)
 The sword outwears its sheath,
 And the soul wears out the breast.
 BYRON, We'll Go No More A-Roving. (1817)
 There is an old Scots saying that "the blade wears the scabbard."
 J. G. LOCKHART, Reginald Dalton. Bk. iii, ch. 6. (1823)
- <sup>2</sup> Never letting him see you swallow half enough to keep body and soul together.
 JANE COLLIER, The Art of Tormenting. Pt. ii, ch. 2. (1753)
 I can hardly . . . hold body and soul together.
 WALTER SCOTT, Castle Dangerous. Ch. 9. (1831)

 ENNIUS, Epicharmus. Frag. 7, Loeb. (c. 180 B. C.)
- <sup>5</sup> The soul needs few things, the body many.
 HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 642. (1640)
 If our Bodies were to cost no more than our Souls, we might board cheap.
 THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2698. (1732)
- <sup>6</sup> Never were you a body without a soul. (Non tu corpus eras sine pectore.)
 HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 4, l. 6. (20 B. C.)
 The proverbial phrase, "Corpus sine pectore" is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, x, 80.
- <sup>7</sup> It is worse to be sick in soul than in body, for those afflicted in body only suffer, but those afflicted in soul both suffer and do ill. (χείρον νοσείν ταῖς ψυχαῖς ἢ τοῖς σώμασιν.)
 PLUTARCH, Moralia: Affections of Soul and Body. Sec. 501E. (c. A. D. 95) CICERO, Tusculanian Disputations, iii, 5, 10, says, "The soul which is suffering from some disease is no more in a sound condition than the body which is diseased."
- <sup>8</sup> The soul is nothing apart from the senses. (μεθὲν εἶναι ψυχὴν παρὰ τὰς αἰσθήσεις.)
 PROTAGORAS, Maxim. (c. 450 B. C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, ix, 51.
- <sup>9</sup> It is the soul, and not the strong-box, which should be filled. (Animum impleri debere, non arcam.)
 SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xci, sec. 32. (c. A. D. 64)
 For of the soule the bodie forme doth take:
 For soule is forme, and doth the bodie make.
 EDMUND SPENSER, An Hymn in Honour of Beautie, l. 132. (1596)
 Good for the body is the work of the body, and good for the soul the work of the soul.
 H. D. THOREAU, Winter, 23 Jan., 1841.

- <sup>10</sup> The soul is born old, but it grows young; that is the comedy of life. The body is born young and grows old; that is life's tragedy.

II—The Sow Teaching Minerva

5 As well might a sow teach Athena. (ὅς τῇρ Ἀθηνᾶν.)

DEMADES, Retort, when some one suggested that Demosthenes be his teacher. (c. 340 B.C.) See PLUTARCH, Demosthenes, xi, 5.

To Demades who shouted, "Demosthenes would correct me—the sow correcting Athena" (ἡ ὅς τῇρ Ἀθηνᾶν), Demosthenes replied, "Yes, your Athena was caught in adultery last year."

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Precepts of Statecraft. Sec. 803D. (A. D. 97) Demosthenes is pointing out that Athena (or Minerva) was herself something of a sow. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, i, 40, with the Latin, "Sus Minervam," the ignorant trying to instruct the learned. An old proverb, sometimes given as "Sus docet Minervam" (The sow teaches Minerva). Minerva was the goddess of wisdom, and another proverb relating to her is "Invita Minerva," cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, i, 42, used of an ignoramus trying to become learned, or accomplish something, without the assistance of Minerva.

*Tis but the sow to Minerva. (Etsi sus Miner-vam.)

CICERO, Ad Familiares. Bk. ix, epis. xviii, sec. 4. (46 B.C.)

A swyne to teache Minerua was a prouerbe.

NICOLAS UDALL, tr. Erasmus 342b. (1542)

In Latin they say Sus Minervam, when an unlearned dunce goeth about to teach his better or a more learned man, . . . or as we say in English, the foul Sow teach the fair Lady to spin

EDWARD TOPSELL, The Historie of Foure-footed Beasts (1658), p. 523. (1607)

6 The sow contended against Athena. (ὅς ποτ' Ἀθαναίαν ἔριν ἦρκεν.)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls. Idyl v, l. 23. (c. 270 B.C.)

Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, i, 41, who gives the Latin, "Sus cum Minerva certamen suscepit," and points out how often the ignorant and stupid contend with the venerable and learned.

Like the wasp buzzing against the cricket. (σφᾶξ βομβέων τέττιγος ἐναντίον.)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls. Idyl v, l. 29. Erasmus gives the Latin equivalent as "Upupa cum cygnis" (the hoopoe against the swan).

III—Silk Purse and Sow's Ear

7 A man cannot make a cheverill purse of a sowes eare.

RANDIE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Pigeon. (1611)

You will never make a sattin purse of a Sowes ear.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 13. (1659)

You cannot make velvet of a sow's ear.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 152. (1670)

You can never make a silken Purse of a Sow's Ear.

DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 117. (1709)

cock Murder Case, p. 28. (1942) etc., etc.

Who would expect velvet to be made out of a sow's ear?

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Clarissa, iv, 119. (1748)

Every man and every race is capable of education up to a certain point, but not to the extent of being made from a sow's ear into a silk purse.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Life and Habit, p. 201. (1877)

You can't make a purse out of somebody's ear.

CLIFFORD ODETS, Golden Boy. Act i, sc. 3. (1937)

[He] has made many a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

You cannot make a whistle out of a pig's tail.

UNKNOWN, Peter Prim's Pride. (1810) The French say, "On ne saurait faire d'une buse une épervier" (You cannot make a sparrowhawk out of a buzzard).

SOWING

<sup>2</sup>
He that sows in the highway wearieth his oxen, and loseth his corn.

THOMAS DRAKE, Bibliotheca, p. 222. (1633)
He that sows in the Highway, tires his Oxen, and loseth his Corn.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2305. (1732)
He that sows upon marble, will have many a hungry belly before harvest.

JOHN ARBUTHNOT, John Bull, p. 16. (1712)
See also under LABOR LOST.

<sup>3</sup>
He that sows, trusts in God.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 344. (1640)
Who sows his corn in the field trusts in God

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 24. (1670)
Whoever plants a seed beneath the sod,
He trusts in God.

LIZZIE YORK CASE, There Is No Unbelief. (c.
1878)

Sown corn is not lost.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 126. (1875)

<sup>4</sup>
The increase is small of seed to timely sowing.
GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 192. (1576)
Pettie may have been the originator of this phrase, which was borrowed by GREENE,
Mamillia, p. 121.

<sup>5</sup>
Sowing on the rocks and stones. (σπείρειν εἰς πέτρας τε καὶ λίθους.)

PLATO, Laws. Bk. viii, sec. 838E. (c. 375 B.C.)
In another place Plato advises, "Don't sow a stony field" (σπερὸν ἀγρὸν μὴ σπείρειν), and ZENOBIOUS, iii, 55, points out the folly of "Sowing on the water" (εἰς ὕδωρ σπείρειν).

Why sow seeds in sand? You are plowing the shores with oxen that will accomplish nothing.
(Quid harenae semina mandas? | non profecturis litora bubus aras.)

OVID, Heroides. Epis. v, l. 115. (c. 10 B.C.) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, iv, 52, with the shorter proverbial form, "Harenae mandas semina." He gives at the same time another proverb, "In aqua vel in saxis sementem facis" (You sow seeds in water or among stones), which derives from Theognis (c.
600 B.C.)

To sow corne in the see sande, ther wyll no crope growe.

JOHN SKELTON, Speke, Parrot, l. 342. (1529)

For he that believeth, bearing in hand,
Plougheth in the water, and soweth in the sand.

SIR THOMAS WYATT, Poems. (a. 1542) "Bearing in hand" i. e. after proof to the contrary.
And fruitlesse cleane to sow the barrein sand.

GEORGE TURBERVILLE, Tragical Tales, 404. (1587)

<sup>6</sup>
One should sow with the hand, not from the sack's mouth. (ἐκείνη τῇ χειρὶ σπείρειν, ἀλλὰ μὴ δὲλψ τῷ θυλάκῳ.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: On the Fame of the Athenians. Sec. 348. (c. A.D. 95) Plutarch tells how, when Pindar was still young and prided himself on his felicitous use of words, Corinna warned him that his writing lacked refinement, since he did not introduce myths, whereupon Pindar composed a lyric so full of mythological allusions that, when he showed it to Corinna, she laughed and said that he should sow with the hand, not with the whole sack.

Men use to sow with the hand and not with the whole sacke.

SIR JOHN HARINGTON, A Briefe Apologie of Poetrie. (1591)

Wee sow the furrow, not by the sacke, but by the handfull.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, Characters: A Noble and Retired House-keeper. (1613)

Proud daughter of that monarch, upon whom Though elsewhere it grow dark, sun never sets.
(Altera figlia Di quel monarcha a cui Nè anco, quando annotta, il Sol tramonta.)

GIAMBATTISTA GUARINI, Pastor Fido. (1590)

Referring to Catharine of Austria, daughter of Philip II of Spain, who is supposed to have said, "The sun never sets upon my empire"—a boast previously made by other rulers, among them Alexander the Great (WILLIAMS, Life. Ch. 13); and for other empires: for Rome by CLAUDIAN, De Consulatu Stilichonis, iii, 139, OVID, Fasti, ii, 136, TIBULLUS, Elegies, ii, v, 58, VERGIL, Aeneid, vi, 795; for Portugal by CAMOENS, Lusiad, i, 8; and for England by many writers. See under ENGLAND.

A Monarch, who, as not contented that the Sun riseth and setteth in his dominions, may seem to desire to make all his own where he shineth.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy State. Bk. ii, ch. 21. (1642) Of the King of Spain.

The catholic king . . . wears the sun for his helmet, because it never sets upon all his dominions.

JAMES HOWELL, Letters (1650), i, 358. (1645) It may be said of the Hollanders as of the Spaniards, that the sun never sets upon their dominions.

THOMAS GAGE, New Survey of the West Indies: Epistle Dedicatory. (1648)

1 There has never been any discussion in Spain. (Nunca se disputó España.)

JOHN HAY, Castilian Days. Ch. 10. (1872) Quoted as from "an eminent Spanish writer."

2 There is nothing ill in Spaine, but that which speakes. (No ay cosa mala en España, sino lo que habla.)

JAMES HOWELL, Instructions for Forreine Travell. Ch. 7. (1642)

It requires, men say, a good constitution to travel in Spain.

Spoken to them who are careful and penurious in some trifling things. but neglective in the main chance.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 299. (1721)

While we are saving and scrimping at the spigot, the government is drawing off at the bung.

J. R. LOWELL, The Biglow Papers. Ser. i, No. 8.
Note. (1848)

To use a homely illustration, it is to save at the spile, and waste at the bung.

H. D. THOREAU, Winter, 26 Dec., 1860.

People are often saving at the wrong place. . .
They spare at the spigot, and let all run away at the bung-hole.

A solitarie Sparrow in the house top.

GUAZZO, Civile Conversation, iv, 124. (1574)

You, a sparrow on the housetop lonely,

I, a lone she-bird of his feather.

ROBERT BROWNING, Youth and Art. (1864)

10
Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?
and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. (οὐχὶ δύο στρουθία ἀσσαρίων πωλεῖται; καὶ ἐν ἐξ αὐτῶν οὐ πεσεῖται ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς ὑμῶν.)

New Testament: Matthew, x, 29. (c. A.D. 65)

The Vulgate is, "Nonne duo passeress asse vaeneunt: et unus ex illis non cadet super terram sine patre vestro?"

He that doth the ravens feed,

Yea, providently caters for the sparrow.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, ii, 3, 43. (1600)

There's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, v, 2, 230. (1600)

You know what the Bible says about not one sparrow.

F. B. YOUNG, A Man About the House, p. 142
(1942)

11
While the sparrow remains under the eaves the swallow departs. (Passere sub tecto re-manente recedit hirundo.)

A medieval Latin proverb, from a 13th century
Vienna manuscript. See 2254:1.

SPEAR

12
He that hath a good spear, let him proue it against a wal.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 28. (1578)

He that hath a good spear, let him try it.

Book of Meery Riddles. Prov. 74. (1629)

Him thus intent Ithuriel with his Spear
Touch'd lightly; for no falshood can endure Touch of Celestial temper.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. iv, l. 810. (1667) A touch of the angel Ithuriel's spear exposed deceit.

The new weapon of psychology . . . may become for us an Ithuriel's spear. When the Devil within us pretends to be an angel, . . . at a touch of that spear the disguise will fall away.

I—Speech: Definitions

H. G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 490. (1855) Quoting Cato.

DEMOCRITUS, Idyls. (c. 400 B. C.)

Man's speech is like his life. (ὁλός ὁ βίος τοῖος ὁ λόγος.)

SOCRATES, Apothegm. (c. 400 B. C.) See CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum, v, 16, 47. Cicero's Latin rendering is, "Qualis autem homo ipse esset, talem eius esse orationem."

A man's character is revealed by his speech. (ἀνδρὸς χαρακτήρ ἐκ λόγου γνωρίζεται.)

MENANDER, The Flute Girl, l. 26. (c. 300 B. C.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium, cites this proverb and gives the Latin, "Talis hominibus fuit oratio, qualis vita."

The talk of men at the same time conceals and reveals their character. (Sermo hominum mores et celat et indicat idem.)

CATO (?), Disticha. Bk. iv, No. 20. (c. 175 B. C.)

As the man is, so is his talk. (Qualis vir, talis oratio.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium, xx. (c. A. D. 64) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vi, 50, together with similar sentiments by Aristides, and others. TAVERNER, Translations from Erasmus, fo. 19, adds, "The talke of honest man is honestye, the talk of knaues is knauerye."

As a man lives, so will he speak. (Ut vivat, quemque etiam dicere.)

QUINTILIAN, Institutionis Oratoriae. Bk. xi, ch. 1, sec. 30. (c. A. D. 80) Quoted as a Greek aphorism.

A man is known by his speech, the stupid by their silence.

SAEMUND (?), Poetic Edda: Hovamol. St. 57. (c. 900)

Speech shows what a man is.

KAIBARA EKKEN, Ten Kun (Ten Precepts): On Speech. (1710) Quoted as an old saying.

<sup>4</sup> Language most shews a man: Speak that I may judge thee.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Oratio Imago Animi. (1636)

Experts feel the pulse of the soul in the tongue, wherefore the sage says, Speak, if you wish me to know thee. (Toman los peritos el pulso al ánimo en la lengua, y en fe de ella dijo el sabio: Habla, si quierases que te conozca.)

BALTASAR GRACIAN, Oráculo Manual. Maxim 148. (1647)

A man cannot speak but he judges himself.

EMERSON, Essays: Compensation. (1841)

PIETRO MANZOLI (PALINGENIUS STELLATUS), Zodiacus Vitae. Bk. i, l. 194. (1537)

Speech is the picture of the mind.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 24. (1670) The Italians say, "Al canto si conosce l' uccello; ed al parlar, il cervello" (By the song one knows the bird; by the speech, the brain).

SOLON, Apothegms. (c. 600 B. C.) As quoted by DIOGENES LAERTIUS, i, 58, and by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vi, 50.

Speech is the mirror of the soul; as the man so is his speech. (Sermo animi est imago; qualis vir, talis et oratio est.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 692. (c. 43 B. C.)

<sup>8</sup> Speech is the golden harvest that followeth the flowering of thought.

M. F. TUPPER, Proverbial Philosophy: Of Speaking. (1839) Tupper adds, "Speech is reason's brother, and a kingly prerogative of man."

II—Speech: Apothegms

AESCHYLUS, Suppliant Maidens, l. 447. (c. 485 B. C.)

<sup>10</sup> Another good thing in the heart of God is to pause before speaking.

AMEN-EM-APT, Teaching How to Live. Col. v, l. 7. (c. 700 B. C.) Griffith, tr.

Sleep a night before speaking.

AMEN-EM-APT, Teaching How to Live, v, 13.

See also THOUGHT: THOUGHT AND SPEECH. Speech is swift when the heart is hurt.

AMEN-EM-APT, Teaching How to Live, xii, 1.

ARISTOPHANES, The Clouds, l. 219. (423 B. C.)

The Pythagoreans referred to "The Master," that is to Pythagoras, as "Himself" (αὐτός), and Aristophanes is laughing at them. The Latin, of course, is "Ipse dixit." See ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, v, 87. One wonders whether the Irish habit of referring to the head of the house as "Himself" can be derivative.

I am not disposed to approve the practice traditionally ascribed to the Pythagoreans, who, when questioned as to the grounds of any assertion that they advanced in debate, are said to have been accustomed to reply, "He himself said so" (Ipse dixit), "he himself" being Pythagoras.

CICERO, De Natura Deorum. Bk. i, ch. 5, sec. 10.

(45 B. C.) Corneille has, "Moi, moi dis-je, et c'est assez" (I, I say it, and that is enough).

Pythagoras, to whom was applied the phrase, "The Master said" (αὐτὸς ἔφα), which passed into a proverb of ordinary life.

DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Pythagoras. Bk. viii, 46. (C. A. D. 230)

Did I say so? To be sure, if I said so, it was so.

GOLDSMITH, The Citizen of the World. No. 54. (1760)

ARISTOPHANES, The Frogs, l. 839. (405 B. C.) Referring to Aeschylus.

More talkative than a turtle-dove. (τρυγόνος λαλιώτερος.)

MENANDER, Plokion. Fragment. (c. 300 B. C.)

Cited as a proverb by ZENOBIOUS, Adagia, ii, 39 (C. A. D. 130), and by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, v, 30, with the Latin, "Turture loquacior" ZENOBIOUS, ii, 80, cites another, also as a proverb, βουβύλιος ἄνθρωπος, a man who buzzes like a bee. ERASMUS, i, ix, 100, adds another, "Cicada vocalior" (More vocal than a cricket).

He hath eaten the hen's rump. (Ha mangiato il cul della gallina.)

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 191. (1678)

An Italian proverb. Ray adds, "Said of a person who is full of talk." Also called in medieval times "The Pope's nose," and in mid-western America, "The piece that went over the fence last."

He has a rage for saying something when there's nothing to be said.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Remark, to Dr. Burney, referring to Warburton. See ROSWELL, Life, 1758.

She was a perfect blatherskite.

MARK TWAIN, Connecticut Yankee, p. 96. (1889)

ARISTOPHANES, The Frogs, l. 1445. (405 B. C.) Nothing is more useful to man than to speak correctly. (Utilius homini nihil est, quam recte loqui.)

PHRAEDRUS, Fables. Bk. iv, fab. 12, l. 1. (c. 25 B. C.) Unlearnedly and clearly, as the adage has it. (Indoctius et apertius, ut aiunt.)

AULUS GELLIUS, Noctes Atticae. Bk. xii, ch. 5. (C. A. D. 150) Quoting Aristophanes' line as "an old and familiar proverb."

Say nothing unless it is as clear as morning.

Babylonian Talmud: Sanhedrin, fo. 7a. (c. 450) Whate'er is well-conceived is clearly said. (Ce que l'on conçoit bien s'énonce clairement.)

BOILEAU, L'Art Poétique. Chant i, l. 153. (1674)

ARISTOPHANES, The Wasps, l. 921. (422 B. C.)

The well-known French phrase is "Cela va sans dire" (That goes without saying), sometimes expanded to, "Cela est comme le bréviaire de Messire Jean, il va sans dire."

<sup>4</sup> If you say what is just, men will hate you; if you say what is unjust, the gods will. (ἐὰν μὲν γὰρ τὰ δίκαια λέγῃς, οἱ ἄνθρωποι σε μισήσουσιν, ἐὰν δὲ τὰ ἀδίκαια, οἱ θεοί.)

ARISTOTLE, Art of Rhetoric. Bk. ii, ch. 23, sec. 15. (c. 330 B. C.) Quoting a priestess who refused to permit her son to speak in public.

The man who carries the beam. (ὁ τὴν δοκὸν φέρων.)

ARISTOTLE, Art of Rhetoric. Bk. iii, ch. 12, sec. 3. (c. 330 B. C.) Quoted as a proverb, referring to a stiff, ungraceful speaker.

Babylonian Talmud: Berachoth, fo. 16a. (c. 450)

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Discourse. (1625)

R. S. S. BADEN-POWELL, The Matabele Campaign, p. 235. (1897) Referred to as a maxim

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), v, 10. (c. 190 B. C.) Oesterley, tr. The usual version is, "Let thy word be the same." In xxxii, 8, there is a further admonition, "Let thy speech be short, comprehending much in few words."

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), vi, 5. (c. 190 B. C.) Oesterley, tr.

Soft speech acts like water on the fires of wrath.

SADI, Bustan. Ch. iv, Apologue 15. (c. 1257)

Gentle and courteous speech is the Adamant stone whiche draweth unto it the heartes of all men.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 157. (1574) Pettie, tr.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxxii, 8. (c. 190 B. C.) Oesterley, tr. The regular rendering is, "Let thy speech be short, comprehending much in few words." The Portuguese say, "Ter-te-hão por alguem" (Speak little and well; you will be accounted somebody).

The less said the better.

JANE AUSTEN, Sense and Sensibility. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1811)

<sup>11</sup> I have not multiplied my speech overmuch.

Book of the Dead. Ch. cxxv, l. 33. (c. 4000 B. C.)

Much speaking is an abomination.

ANI. Maxims. No. 1. (c. 1000 B. C.)

1 He speaks . . . like a frog in a well, or a cricket in a wall.

RICHARD BRATHWAIT, Whimzies, p. 70. (1631)
He speaks like a mouse in a cheese.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 4. (1659)
RAY, p. 186; FULLER, No. 5233.

He speaks as if every Word would lift a Dish.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2024. (1732)

2 It is better to be anxious about what I shall say, than to suffer remorse for what I have said.

BUZURCHIMIHR, Maxim. (c. 570) Quoted in the Atish Kadah introduction to SADI'S Gulistan. See also SILENCE AND SPEECH

3 Of that which doesn't concern you speak neither good nor evil. (Di cosa che non ti cale. Non dir nè ben nè male.)

You are skilled in knowing what to say and what not to say. (Dicenda tacendave calles.)

PERSIUS, Satires. Sat. iv, l. 5. (c. A. D. 58)

The wise man, before he speaks, will consider well what he speaks, to whom he speaks, and where and when. (Sapiens, ut loquitur, multa prius considerat, quid dicat, aut cui dicat, quo in loco, et tempore.)

ST. AMBROSE, De Officiis Ministrorum. Bk. i,

ch. 10, sec. 35. (c. A. D. 385) This dictum, like so many others, was later made into a medieval Latin jingle: "Si sapiens fore vis, sex serva quae tibi mando, | Quid dicas, et ubi, de quo, cui, quomodo, quando" (What you say, and where, to whom, how, and when).

If you your lips would keep from slips,

Five things observe with care:

To whom you speak, of whom you speak,

And how, and when, and where.

W. E. NORRIS, Thirlby Hall, i, 315. (1884)

If thou wishest to be wise,

Keep this truth before thine eyes:

What thou sayest and how, beware,

Of whom, to whom, when, and where.

PACUVIUS, Thraldorestes. Frag. 129, Loeb (c. 160 B. C.) "Cacoëthes loquendi" is the proverbial Latin phrase—an incurable passion for speaking.

A long discourse argueth folly.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 49. (1579) No discourse that is long can be pleasing. (Ninguno razonamiento hay gustoso si es largo.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 21. (1605)

Best is the tongue that feels the rein;

He that talks much, talks in vain;

We from the wordy torrent fly:

Who listens to the chattering pye?

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1741.

You've made summer-complaint speeches long enuff.

ARTEMUS WARD, Things in New York. (1863)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Education of Children, 12F. (c. A. D. 95) Plutarch is quoting a proverb, which he explains means that it is not fitting to put clever speech into a base mind, for "speech is the food of thought (λόγος τροφή διανοίας ἐστίν) and baseness in men makes it unclean." "Speech is the food of thought" is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, i, 2, who gives the Latin, "Oratio cibus est animi."

HENRY PORTER, The Two Angrie Women of Abington. Act i, sc. 1. (1599)

Whatsoever they speak is well-taken; and whatsoever is well-taken is well-spoken.

BEN JONSON, Cynthia's Revels. Act iv, sc. 3. (1600)

III—Speech: Freedom of Speech

See also Thought: Freedom of Thought

Liberty of speech inviteth and provoketh liberty to be used again, and so bringeth much to a man's knowledge.

FRANCIS BACON, Of the Advancement of Learning. Ch. 2. (1605)

I may stand alone,

But would not change my free thoughts for a throne.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xi, st. 89. (1820)

The most beautiful thing in the world is freedom of speech. (τὸ κάλλιστον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, παρηγορία.)

In peace and war, in council and in fight.

POPE, tr., The Iliad. Bk. xii, l. 249. (1720)

The world always lets a man tell what he thinks, his own way.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. BOSWELL, Tour to the Hebrides, 19 Aug., 1773.

I honor the man who is willing to sink
Half his present reputé for the freedom to think,
And when he has thought, be his cause strong or weak,

Will risk t'other half for the freedom to speak

J. R. LOWELL, A Fable for Critics. (1848)

I liked the author of de l'Esprit [Helvétius].

... But I have never approved either the errors of his book, or the trivial truths which he recites with so much emphasis. I have, however, boldly taken his part when absurd men have condemned him for these very truths.
(J'aimais l'auteur du livre de l'Esprit. . .
Mais je n'ai jamais approuvé ni les erreurs de son livre, ni les vérités triviales qu'il débite quand les hommes absurdes l'ont condamné pour ces vérités même.)

VOLTAIRE, Dictionnaire Philosophique: Homme
(1764)

I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

S. G. TALLENTYRE, The Friends of Voltaire, p.
199. (1906) The sentence, enclosed in quotation marks, purported to be from a letter written by Voltaire to Claude Adrien Helvétius, referring to his book, de l'Esprit, which Voltaire had just read. It was so striking that it was widely quoted as Voltaire's own, but when a careful search of Voltaire's correspondence failed to disclose it, Miss Tallentyre was asked where she had found it. She replied that the sentence was not Voltaire's but a paraphrase of her own—probably of the sentences quoted above.

VI—Speech: Spades are Spades

(ὅστις καλέσειε κάρδοπον τὴν καρδόπην.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Clouds, l. 1251. (423 B.C.)

Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iii, 5.

The Macedonians are by nature a rough and rustic people who call a tub a tub. (τὴν σκάφην σκάφην λέγοντας.)

PHILIP OF MACEDON, to some envoys who complained that certain members of his train had called them traitors. (c. 350 B.C.) As given by PLUTARCH, Sayings of Kings and Commanders. Sec. 178B. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iii, 5, who gives the Latin as, "Ficus ficus, ligonem ligonem vocat" (To call a fig a fig and a spade a spade). This is the first appearance of "spade" in the proverb, and may have been due to a mistake on the part of Erasmus in confusing σκάφη, which means a tub, or boat, or bowl, or any sort of hollow vessel which has been dug or scooped out, with some derivative from the stem of σκάπτειν, to dig, which may also mean the instrument with which the digging is done, i.e. a spade. But more probably it was a deliberate substitution on the part of Erasmus, who knew his Greek, and his account of the incident would seem to substantiate this. He says, "When those persons who were with Lasthenes were aggrieved because certain members of Philip's train called them traitors, Philip answered that the Macedonians were altogether gross and rustic, and had not the wit to call a spade by any other name than a spade, alluding to the common proverb of the Greeks, calling figs figs, and a tub a tub, and meaning that they were traitors in very deed." And then Erasmus cites the proverb in another form, "Ficus ficus voco, panarium panarium" (To call a fig a fig and a bread-basket a bread-basket). Confutation is my name, the friend of truth and candor. . . . I call a fig a fig, a tub a tub. (τὰ σῦκα σῦκα, τὴν σκάφην σκάφην λέγων.)

MENANDER, Fragments. No. 545K. (c. 300 B.C.)

This is the usual form of the Greek proverb, derived from Aristophanes. So frequently used that only a few examples will be cited.

NAEVIUS, Triphallus. (c. 225 B.C.) Spitting was a charm for averting evil. See AULUS GELLIUS, ii, 19.

She will not spit in her bosom for luck. (In sinum suum non spuit.)

PETRONIUS, Satyricon. Sec. 74. (c. A.D. 60)

<sup>3</sup> They did nothing but spit, and that as white as Maltha cotton. (Ilz ne faisoient que cracher aussi blanc comme cotton de Malthe.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. ii, ch. 7. (1532)

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 216. (1670) It was an old idea that it gave a dog pleasure to spit in his mouth.

<sup>5</sup> He spit in his hat on Thursday; and wiped it off on Friday.

HORACE WALPOLE, Letter to Horace Mann, 25 Feb., 1750. Walpole calls this a new fashionable proverb, based on an incident in which Lord Cobham, on a wager, declared he would spit in Lord Hervey's hat without its being resented; but apologized and wiped it off when Hervey showed anger.

SPOILS

<sup>6</sup> Things conquered in war are said to belong to their conquerors. (τὰ κατὰ πόλεμον κρατούμενα τῶν κρατούντων εἶναι φασιν.)

ARISTOTLE, Politics. Bk. i, ch. 2, sec. 16. (c. 330 B.C.) When a stronger than he shall come upon him and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils. (τὰ σκῦλα αὐτοῦ διαδίδωσιν.)

New Testament: Luke, xi, 22. (c. A.D. 65) The Vulgate is, "Spolia eius distribuet."

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. iii, eleg. iv, l. 21. (c. 22 B.C.) The Latin proverbial phrase is "Spolia optima" (The splendid spoils), the personal spoils of the enemy's general when slain by the opposing commander. It is used by Livy and others.

It may be, sir, that the politicians of New York are not as fastidious as some gentlemen are as to disclosing the principles on which they act. They boldly preach what they practice. When they are not contending for victory, they avow their intention of enjoying the fruits of it. . . . They see nothing wrong in the rule that to the victor belong the spoils of the enemy.

Democrats are to the manna born.

OGDEN NASH, Vive le Postmaster General. (1933)

The man who pulls the plow gets the plunder.

HUEY LONG, Speech, U.S. Senate, 30 Jan., 1934.

<sup>8</sup> I have loaden me with many spoils.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry VI, ii, i, 80. (1591)

Mighty Caesar, thund'ring from afar,
Seeks on Euphrates' Banks the Spoils of War.

DRYDEN, tr., Vergil's Georgics, iv, 810. (1697)
[He] recovered the prisoners with all the spoils of war.

STANFORD, Symbols of Christ. Ch. 1. (1865)

SPOKE

<sup>9</sup> With that Philautus came in with his spoake.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 291. (1580)
Camilla, not thinking to be silent, put in her spoke.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 413.

You would have your spoke in my cart?

BEN JONSON, The Poetaster. Act ii, sc. 1. (1601)

<sup>10</sup> Put in hir spoke as she thought into the best wheele.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 413. (1580)

I will sett a spoke in your cogge.

BRIAN MELBANCKE, Philotimus, G j b. (1583)

I'll set a spoke in your cart.

The Weakest Goeth to the Wall, l. 848. (1600)

I'll put a spoke among your wheels.

JOHN FLETCHER, The Mad Lover. Act iii, sc. 6

(1617) I'll thwart your purpose. O.E.D. suggests that the phrase is a mistranslation of the Dutch, "Een spaak [bar, stave] in 't wiel steeken."

He . . . look'd to be made an emperor for't.

But the Devel did set a spoke in his Cart.

UNKNOWN, Merry Drollery, ii, 37. (1661)

She speaks as she were Queen, but I shall put a spoke in her rising Wheel of Fortune.

APIRA BEHN, Roundheads. Act v, sc. 2. (1682)

[This] has put a spoke in my ladder.

EDMUND HICKERINGILL, The Trimmer. Ch. 4. (1683)

They had clapt such a Spoke in his Wheel, as had disabled him from being a Coachman.

RICHARD STEELE, The Spectator. No. 498. (1712)

It certainly amused me to put a spoke in his wheel.

CONNINGTON, No Past Is Dead, p. 100. (1942)
The allusion is to the pin or spoke used to lock wheels in machinery; hence to put an impediment in one's way.

Notes and Queries, ix, vii, 258. (1901) The French say, "Mettre des batons dans le roue."

<sup>1</sup>
It is the best spoke in your wheel.
ALLAN RAMSAY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 61. (1737)

<sup>2</sup>
The worst spoke in the cart breaks first.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 145. (1670)

<sup>3</sup>
To put a spoke in a man's wheel, is to say something of him to his advantage.
W. H. SMYTH, The Sailor's Word-Book: Spoke. (1867) It will be noted that this is the exact opposite of the usual meaning.

I shall perhaps be seeing . . . your new captain . . . this evening, and, if so, I will put a spoke in your wheel for you.

HARRY COLLINGWOOD (W. J. C. LANCASTER), Under the Meteor Flag, p. 50. (1884)

<sup>4</sup>
Any spoke will lead an ant to the hub.
REX STOUT, Fer-de-Lance. Ch. 8. (1934)

SPONGE

<sup>5</sup>
This sponge sucketh dry the commerce of societies.

SIR WILLIAM CORNWALLIS, Essays. Ch. 40. (1601)
Ros.: Take you me for a sponge, my lord?
Hamlet: Aye, sir, that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, iv, 2, 15. (1600)
As I could only contribute [to the meal] a couple of rolls of bread, . . . I am inclined to think he considered me rather a sponge.

J. L. STEPHENS, Incidents of Travel in Greece, Turkey, Russia and Poland, p. 36. (1838)
An old sponger on other people's kindness.

THACKERAY, Lovel the Widower. Ch. 1. (1860)
That large class of fellow-citizens who are commonly included in the genus "sponge."

E. P. WHIPPLE, Character and Characteristic Men, p. 22. (1866)

<sup>6</sup>
"To throw up the sponge," to submit, give over the struggle—from the practice of throwing up the sponge used to clean the combatants' faces, at a prize-fight, as a signal that the "mill" is concluded.

J. C. HOTTEN, Slang Dictionary, p. 224. (1860)
Other proverbial phrases derived from prize-fighting are "Down but not out," "To take the count," "To give a body blow," "To hit below the belt."

He'd have chucked up the sponge and cleared out.
ROLF BOLDREWOOD (T. A. BROWNE), Robbery Under Arms. Ch. 24. (1888)

If ever you are tempted to say . . . "I am beaten and I throw up the sponge," remember Paul's wise exhortation.

ALEX. MACLAREN, Philippians, p. 366. (1909)

<sup>7</sup>
I will do any thing, Nerissa, ere I'll be married to a sponge.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice, i, 2, 108. (1597) A drunkard.

You Sponges must be drunk with Lees of Wine.

JOHN DRYDEN, tr., Juvenal, v, 34. (1693)

You sponges miking round the pubs.

W. E. HENLEY, Villon's Good-Night. (1887)

SPOON

<sup>8</sup>
A horn spoon holds no poison. They who cannot procure better spoons are not worth poisoning.

He was ane o' them wad make a spune or spoil a horn.

WALTER SCOTT, Rob Roy. Ch. 22. (1818) A Scottish proverbial phrase, meaning to make a determined effort to achieve something, whether ending in success or failure. The making of spoons out of horns of cattle or sheep was common in Scotland until late in the 19th century.—O.E.D.

[He] will either mak a speen or spill a guid horn.
JAMES HOGG, Tales and Sketches (1866), p. 262. (1820)

I can't cobble: I must "either make a spoon or spoil a horn."

LORD BYRON, Letters (Prothero), v, 16. (1820)
Alan was the lad to make a spoon or spoil a horn.

WALTER SCOTT, Redgauntlet. Ch. 1. (1824)

Your son . . . will turn out something some day. He'll make a spoon or spoil a horn.

UNKNOWN, Boys Own Paper, Dec., 1892, p. 78/1. A lad showing much promise was commonly referred to as one who would "either make a spoon or spoil a horn."

Notes and Queries, xi, i, 58. (1910)

I had to make my spoon, and there'd be plenty to say I'd only spoiled a horn or an honest man.

G. K. CHESTERTON, The Fad of the Fisherman. (1922)

<sup>10</sup>
[She] was always fond of putting her spoon into other people's broth.

F. G. TRAFFORD (MRS. J. H. RIDDELL), The World in the Church, i, 296. (1863)

<sup>11</sup>
The more he thought on't, the madder he grew,

Until he vowed by the great horn spoon,

Unless they did the thing that was right,

He'd give them a licking, and that pretty soon.

UNKNOWN, French Claim. In McCARTY, National Song Book, i, 222. (1842)

Sez Mr. Foote,

"I should like to shoot

The holl gang, by the gret horn spoon!" sez he.

Too late one shuts the stable when the horse is lost. (A tart ferme on l'estable, quant li chevauz est perduz, ci dit li vilains.)

UNKNOWN, Li Proverbe au Vulain (Tobler) p. 22. (c. 1190) A more modern French form is, "Il est temps de fermer l'étable quand les chevaux en sont allés." The Germans say, "Wenn die Pferde fort sind, bessert man den Stall" (When the horses have escaped, one repairs the stable), or "Wenn das Schwein iort ist, so macht man den Stall zu" (When the pig is gone, then the farmer shuts the pen). Common to many languages.

When the hors is stole steke the stabull-dore.

UNKNOWN, Douce MS, 52. Förster, ed. (c. 1350)

For whan the grete stiede

Is stole, thanne he taketh hiede,

And makth the stable dore fast.

GOWER, Confessio Amantis, iv, 901. (c. 1390)
It was not tyme to shette the stable whan the horses ben loste and gone.

WILLIAM CAXTON, tr., Aesope, ii, 245. (1484)
Good it is to shette the stable before the hors be lost.

JEAN D'ARRAS, Melusme. (c. 1500)

Whan the stede is stolyen to shyte the stable dore Comys small pleasoure profyte or vantage.

BARCLAY, Skyp of Folyis (1874), i, 76. (1509)

JOHN CLAVEL, A Recantation. (1628)
When the daughter is stolen, shut Pepper-gate.

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies: Chester, i, 291.
(1662) Fuller explains that Pepper-gate was a postern in the wall surrounding the city of Chester, through which a mayor's daughter eloped, and which he thereupon caused to be bricked up.

It would be merely shutting the stable-door after the steed had broken loose.

WILLIAM DE MORGAN, Alice-for-Short. Ch. 35.
(1907)

Always shut the stable door when the horse has been removed.

H. C. BAILEY, The Long Dinner. (1920)

The horse having apparently bolted, I shall be glad to assist at the ceremony of closing the stable door.

NGAIO MARSH, Death of a Peer, p. 169. (1940)
He locked the stable door while they were putting the cart before the horse.

STANLEY WALKER, *The Uncanny Knacks of Mr.
Doherty*. New Yorker, 12 July, 1941.

The stable had been locked too late to save the horse.

Old Testament: Judges, v, 20. (c. 700 B. C.)

From the so-called "Song of Deborah," celebrating the victory over Sisera at Megiddo.

The stars in their courses have all fought against Sisera and his kind. The way of the transgressor has proved to be not only difficult, but impossible. The universe is against it.

RUFUS M. JONES. (1927) See NEWTON, My Idea of God, p. 57.

<sup>8</sup> Like to the falling of a Star;

Or as the flights of Eagles are.

BISHOP HENRY KING (?), Sic Vita. (a. 1640)

This famous poem of twelve lines was included in Francis Beaumont's Poems, published in 1640, twenty-four years after his death, and was supposed to be his until Henry King claimed it, including it in his Poems, published in 1657. It is now generally agreed that it belongs to King. His verses, after the fashion of the time, had been circulated in manuscript for many years before they were collected and printed, and Beaumont may have had a copy of them, which his editor supposed to be his. Lawrence Mason's unpublished thesis on King, in the Yale University Memorial Library, goes into the subject thoroughly. The verses were imitated by Quarles, Philpot, Wastell, and many others.

Blossomed the lovely stars, the forget-me-nots of the angels.

H. W. LONGFELLOW, Evangeline. Pt. i. (1847)

By night those soft, lasceevious stars leered from those velvet skies.

RUDYARD KIPLING, McAndrew's Hymn. (1893)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 15. (1580)

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, ii, 109. (1576)

The starres do not shine at midday.

WODROEPHE, Spared Hours, p. 503. (1623)

Stars are not seen by Sun-shine.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4253. (1732)

<sup>12</sup> I was born under a star hostile to everybody. (Natus dis inimicis omnibus.)

PLAUTUS, Mostellaria, l. 563. (c. 220 B. C.)

At their births good stars were opposite.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, iv, 4, 215. (1592)

There was a star danced, and under that I was born.

<sup>13</sup> I am the bright and morning star. (ἐγὼ εἰμι . . . ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ λαμπρὸς, ὁ πρωϊνός.)

New Testament: Revelation, xxii, 16. (c. A. D. 90) The Vulgate is, "Ego sum . . . stella splendida et matutina." The phrase was applied by Jesus to himself.

<sup>1</sup> He that strives to touch the starres,
Of stumbles at a strawe.

EDMUND SPENSER, The Shepheardes Calender,
July, l. 99. (1579)

A man gazing at the stars is proverbially at the mercy of the puddles on the road.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp: Men of Letters. (1863)

<sup>2</sup> Nothing is fixed, that mortals see or know,
Unless perhaps some stars be so.

SWIFT, Ode to Dr. Sancroft. (1692)

Bright Star! would I were steadfast as thou art!

JOHN KEATS, Last Sonnet. (1821)

<sup>3</sup> Twinkle, twinkle, little star!
How I wonder what you are,
Up above the world so high,
Like a diamond in the sky!

ANN TAYLOR, The Star. (c. 1814)

<sup>4</sup> Thus is accomplished the journey to the stars.
(Sic itur ad astra.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. ix, l. 641. (19 B. C.)

Wing thy difficult flight to the stars. (Opta ardua pinnis astra sequi.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. xii, l. 892.

There is no easy road from the earth to the stars.
(Non est ad astra mollis e terris via.)

SENECA, Hercules Furens, l. 437. (c. A. D. 60)

Through rough places (difficulties) to the stars.
(Per aspera ad astra.)

PONTANUS, Collectio Proverbiorum, p. 156.

(1778) A proverb suggested by either Vergil or Seneca. Another form is, "Ad astra per ardua," and a similar one, "Per angusta ad augusta." Judge Josiah Miller, a member of the committee appointed to design the state seal of Kansas in 1861, turned the first one around to "Ad astra per aspera," and suggested it as the state motto,—a suggestion which was adopted. The Germans say, "Wer für den Himmel ist erkorn, Den stechen Dis-teln oft und Dorn" (He who for heaven is chosen is often pricked by thistle and thorn).

<sup>5</sup> Too low they build, who build beneath the stars.

To win a race, the swiftness of a dart
Availeth not without a timely start.

(Rien ne sert de courir:

Il faut partir à point.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables. Bk. vi, fab. 10. (1668)

The French also say, "C'est peu de courir; il faut partir à point" (It is a small thing to run; one must start at the right moment).

There is nothing in life like making a good start.
RICHARD FORD, A Handbook for Travellers in

iii, i, 166. (1867)

Allowing an employer to pay starvation wages.
WALTER BESANT, Children of Gibeon. Bk. ii,
ch. 23. (1886)

They're starvation cheap.

RUDYARD KIPLING, Tommy. (1892)

He that loves another better than himselfe.
starves in a cook's shop.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Aimer. (1611)
We see others csurientes in popina, as the byword is, starving in a cook's shop—wretched in their highest fortunes.

THOMAS ADAMS, Sermons (1861), ii, 535. (1629)

What, shall we starve in a Cook's-shop, and a shoulder of mutton by?

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 5/2. (1659)
I'll never starve in a cook's shop.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. ii. (1738)

[He] would rather starve on a penny than work for a pound.

WASHINGTON IRVING, Sketch Book, i, 63. (1820)

STATE

See also Government, Nation

It is for you to judge how you must steer the ship of State. (σὺ δ' αὐτὸς γνῶθι ναυκληρεῖν πόλιν.)

AESCHYLUS, Seven Against Thebes, l. 652. (467
B. C.)

The ship of State is in smooth waters. (πόλις δ' ἐν εὐδίᾳ.)

AESCHYLUS, Seven Against Thebes, l. 2. (c. 467
B. C.)

Guarding the fortunes of the state, guiding the helm upon the stern. (φυλάσσει πρᾶγος ἐν πρύμνῃ πόλεως | οἴακα νωμῶν.)

AESCHYLUS, Seven Against Thebes, l. 2. (c. 467 B. C.) The figure of the ship of state was frequently used. See PLATO, Republic, 488B,
Politics, 302A, Euthydem, 291D; THEOGNIS, 670; HORACE, Odes, i, 15.

Elders, the gods have righted once again

Our storm-tossed ship of state, now safe in port.
(ἄνδρες, τὰ μὲν δὴ πόλεος ἀσφαλῶς θεοὶ πολλῶ σάλῳ σείσαντες ὥρθωσαν πάλιν.)

SOPHOCLES, Antigone, l. 163. (c. 441 B. C.) Storr, tr. The metaphor is repeated in 188: "The State is the good ship that ho'ds our fortunes," and in l. 994, "So hast thou steered the ship of state aright."

Keeping the ship on an even keel, or dying once for all. (ὀρθῶν τὰν ναῦν, ἀπαξ θανεῖν.)

CICERO, Ad Quintum Fratrem. Bk. i, epis. ii, sec. 13. (59 B. C.) Quintus seems to have written his brother that he would keep the ship of state on an even keel, or on a straight course, even if he had to sink her, and go down with colors flying. He is quoting a proverb.

The Metaphor be worn and stale
Betwixt a State, and Vessel under Sail.

SWIFT, Imitations of Horace. Bk. i. ode 14. (1714)

'Tis thou that art the State. (σὺ τοι πόλις.)

AESCHYLUS, Suppliant Maidens, l. 370. (c. 467
B. C.)

The State! That is myself. (L'État, c'est moi.)

LOUIS XIV OF FRANCE, Retort, at the age of seventeen, to the President of the French Parliament, 22 Dec., 1655. See DULAURE,
Histoire de Paris, p. 387. The authenticity of the attribution has been questioned, but it certainly accorded with Louis' opinions, and years later, the first sentence of a course in public law which he caused to have written for his grandson was, "La nation réside tout entière dans la personne du roi" (The nation lives entirely in the person of the king).

ARISTOTLE, Politics. Bk. i, ch. 2, sec. 1. (c. 330 B. C.)
The state does not consist of lath and plaster, but of hearths and altars. (Non est in parietibus res publica. At in aris et fociis.)

CICERO, Ad Atticum. Bk. vii, epis. 11. (49 B. C.)
The state is the association of men, and not men themselves; the citizen may perish, and the man remain.

MONTESQUIEU, Spirit of the Laws. Bk. x. ch. 3. (1748)

Men, highminded men, . . . constitute a State.

SIR WILLIAM JONES, Ode in Imitation of Alcaeus. (c. 1794) See under CITY.

What's rotten in Denmark?

ELLERY QUEEN, The French Powder Mystery. Ch. 14. (1930)

STATESMAN

<sup>5</sup> We pay statesmen for what they say, not for what they do; and judge of them from what they do, not from what they say.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. ii. No. 159. (1820)

GEORGE S. HILLIARD, Eulogy on Daniel Webster, 30 Nov., 1852.

The world is wearied of statesmen whom democracy has degraded into politicians.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Lothair. Ch. 17. (1870)

A statesman is a successful politician who is dead.

THOMAS B. REED, Epigram. (c. 1880) See LODGE, The Democracy of the Constitution, p. 191.

RICHARD STEELE, The Tailor, 8 July, 1710.

The first duty of the statesman is to the poorest of the people.

EDWARD CLARKE, Speech, House of Commons. (1906)

STATION

<sup>9</sup> In that station in which you have been placed, abide. (Qua positus fueris in statione, mane.)

OWID, Fasti. Bk. ii, l. 674. (c. A. D. 8.)

Every man should remain in his own station. (Intra fortunam debet quisque manere suam.)

OWID, Tristia. Bk. iii, eleg. 4, l. 26. (A. D. 9)

Be content with what you are, and wish no change. (Quod sis esse velis nihilque malis.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. x, epig. 47. (c. A. D. 93)

To do my duty in that state of life unto which it shall please God to call me.

Book of Common Prayer: Catechism. (1548)

O let us love our occupations,

Bless the squire and his relations,

Live upon our daily rations,

And always keep our proper stations.

DICKENS, The Chimes, 2nd quarter. (1845)

Quoted by BAILEY, The Apprehensive Dog, p. 128. (1942) The Germans say, "Wo zu dich Gott berufen hat, da bleibe" (Where God has called you, there remain).

STEP

IRVING BERLIN. Title of song. (1918)

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 171. (1639)
WELL BEGUN, HALF DONE, see under BEGINNING

<sup>3</sup> It is only the first step that costs. (Il n'y a que le premier pas que coûte.)

MADAME DU DEFFAND, Letter to D'Alembert, 7 July, 1763; also Letter to Horace Walpole, 6 June, 1767. Voltaire, in a note to the first canto of La Pucelle, tells the story of how the Cardinal de Polignac was relating the history of St. Denis to a lady whom he identifies only as Madame la Marquise du * * * * * St. Denis, it will be remembered, after being beheaded on Montmartre, picked up his head and carried it two leagues to the spot north of Paris where the cathedral dedicated to him now stands and, the Cardinal added, it was only at first that St. Denis found the journey difficult. "Je le crois bien," the lady commented; "il n'y a dans de telles affaires que le premier pas qui coûte" (I can well believe it. In affairs like that it is only the first step that is difficult). Quoted in various forms: "Ce n'est que le premier pas qui coûte," by PATRICIA WENTWORTH, In the Balance, p. 127 (1941); "C'est le premier pas qui coûte," by P. C. WREN, The Uniform of Glory, p. 16 (1941), etc., etc.

The first bathe is always the coldest.

If you tell every Step, you will make a long Journey of it.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2793. (1732)

<sup>5</sup> Step after step the ladder is ascended.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. (1640)
RAY, English Proverbs, p. 25. (1670) FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4260. (1732) The Germans say, "Wer die Leiter hinauf will, muss bei der untersten Sprosse anfangen" (Who will mount the ladder must begin at the lowest step).

<sup>6</sup> The greatest step is that out of doors.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. (1640)

The greatest step to heaven, is out of our own doors, over our own threshold.

WILLIAM GUNNELL, The Christian in Compleat Armour, i, 206. (1655)

The hardest step is over the threshold. (Il più duro passo è quello della soglia.)

HOWELL, Proverbs: Ital.-Eng., p. 7. (1659)

Begin; the getting out of doors is the greatest part of the journey. Varro [Lib. i, Agric.] teaches us the Latin proverb, portam itineri longissimam esse.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Essays in Verse and Prose (1904), x, 105. (a. 1667)

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 254. (1721)

I refused to admit that I had made a faux pas.
L. J. JENNINGS, Chestnuts and Small Beer, p. 110. (a. 1893)

LAO-TSZE, Tao-teh-king (The Way of Virtue). Maxim 64. (c. 550 B.C.) Quoted by KAIBARA EKKEN, Ten Kun, ii, 2. (1710) The French say, "Pas à pas on va bien loin"; the Italians, "Passo a passo si va a Roma." See also under TRIFLES.

It is not the last step that causes weariness: it only declares it. (Le dernier pas ne fait pas la lassitude; il la declare.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 19. (1580)

PLAUTUS, Trinummus, l. 513 (c. 194 B.C.)

Watch your step.

THEODORE SHONTS. As President of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company of New York, in 1907, Shonts made this slogan famous, when he paraded it before the subway passengers, and the platform guards kept repeating it to the people crowding into the trains, to warn them against getting their feet caught in the space which originally existed between train and platform. Too frequently quoted to require examples.

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. ii, l. 724. (19 B.C.) Unable to keep pace.

STEPMOTHER

<sup>12</sup> Who that of his moders doctryne hath dayne,
Shall by his stepdame endure wo care and payne.

ALEXANDER BARCLAY, The Shyp of Follys, i, 203. (1509)

He that will not be warned bi his owne fader, he shall be warned bi his stepfader.

RICHARD HILLS, Common-Place Book, p. 128. (c. 1530)

He that will not be ruled by his owne dame
Shall be ruled by his stepdame.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 9. (1546)

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 77. (1670)

He that will not hear mother-hood, shall hear stepmother-hood. That is, they who will not be prevailed upon by fair means, shall meet with harsher treatment.

CALLIMACHUS, Epigrams. No. viii, l. 4. (c. 250 B. C.) The story is that a youth was garlanding the grave-pillar of his step-mother, thinking that with death her nature had changed, when the stone fell and killed him.

DE QUINCY, Confessions of an English Opium-Eater. Pt. i. (1822) Referring to Oxford Street, London. AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, in Obiter Dicta: Milton, applies the phrase to the university, as opposed to the usual "Alma mater" (Kind mother).

All stepmothers hate their daughters in law.

RICHARD BERNARD, tr., Hecyra. Act ii, sc. 1. (1598) Originally "mother-in-law" was used for what is now known as "stepmother." For instance, THOMAS FULLER, The Holy State, bk. i, ch. 10, writes, "If she becomes a mother in law, there is no difference betwixt her carriage to her own and her second husband's children."

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. (1640) The Germans say, "A good stepmother is as rare as a white raven."

A Step-dame too have I, accused she;

Who rules my Hen-pecked Sire, and orders me.

DRYDEN, tr., Vergil's Pastorals, iii, 48. (1697)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Dinner of the Seven Wise Men, 147C. (c. A. D. 95) Plutarch is telling the story of the young man who threw a stone at his dog, but hit his stepmother. Perhaps the beginning of stepmother jokes. He tells it again in 467C.

He was pretily even with his stepmother, agaynst his will, who throwing a stone at a dog, hit her: saying, it was not flung altogether in vayne.

GUAZZO, Civile Conversation, iii, 21. (1574)

<sup>6</sup> Be a stepmother kindly as she will,

There's in her love some hint of winter's chill.

D'ARCY W. THOMPSON, Sales Attici. (c. 1868)

STICK

ROBERT ANDERSON, Cumberland Ballads, p. 175. (1804) A dash of brandy or whiskey.

This lemonade it has no stick.

E. C. PORTER, Songs of Yale, p. 64. (1854)

Have a parting drink for good luck—coffee, if you like, with a "stick" in it.

MRS. PRAED, Romance of a Station. Ch. 6. (1890)

Have some tea—with a stick in it, as papa calls it.

F. M. CRAWFORD, Three Fates. Ch. 14. (1892)

<sup>8</sup> He's after him with a sharp stick; i. e. he's determined to have satisfaction or revenge.

J. R. BARTLETT, Americanisms: Sharp. (1848)

We are pleased to see that the New York Tribune is still after Senator Carpenter, Conkling and others, with a very sharp stick.

Trenton State Sentinel, 26 May, 1871.

<sup>9</sup> A straight oar being under the water seemeth to be crooked.

FLORIO, tr., Montaigne. Bk. i, ch. 40. (1603)

A straight stick is crooked in the water.

PERSIUS, Satires. No. ii, l. 1. (C. A. D. 58) In

Satire v, l. 108, Persius speaks of marking things to be aimed at and things to be avoided, the former with a white stone, the latter with a black. (Illa prius creta, mox haec carbone.) "Album calculum addere" (To put in a white stone), signified approval, as opposed to black-balling.

This day let a milk-white pearl mark. (Hanc lucem lactea gemma notet.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. viii, No. 45. (A. D. 93) O happy day, to be marked with the whitest stone! (O diem laetum notandumque mihi candidissimo calculo!)

PLINY, Epistles. Bk. vi, epis. 11. (C. A. D. 98)

Pericles separated his whole force into eight divisions, had them draw lots, and permitted the division which drew the white bean to feast and take their ease, while the others did the fighting. And this is the reason, as they say, why those who have had a gay and festive time call it a "white day," from the white bean. (λευκήν ἡμέραν ἐκελύην ἀπὸ τοῦ λευκοῦ κιάμου προσαγορεύειν.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Pericles. Ch. 27, sec. 2. (C. A. D. 110)

In former times the Thracians and Cretans did mark their fortunate and happy days with white stones: their sad and unfortunate ones with black. (Au temps passé les Thraces & Cretes signoient les iours bien fortunez & ioyeux, de pierres blanches: les tristes & defortunez, de noires.)

RABELAIS, Gargantua. Bk. i, ch. 10. (1534)

O festyvall daye . . . worthye to be marked with a stone as whyte as snowe.

JEHAN PALSGRAVE, tr., Acolastus, sig. K1. (1540)

This thing is worthy to be noted with a white stone.

EDWARD HALL, Chronicle (1809), p. 8. (1548)

I shall mark this day with a white stone as one of the happiest I can expect to enjoy in my lifetime. (Este día señalaré yo con piedra blanca.)

Cervantes, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 63. (1615)

Let this auspicious morning be exprest

With a white stone.

JOHN DRYDEN, tr., Persius. Sat. ii, l. 2. (1693)

In mentioning the white stone, he alluded to the Dies fasti of the Romans, albo lapide notati.

SMOLLETT, Roderick Random. Ch. 52. (1748)

I have marked that day with a white stone as being the one on which I ate my first durian.

W. T. HORNADAY, Two Years in the Jungle. Ch. 27. (1885) The durian is an East Indian fruit.

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. iii, cent. iv, No. 74.

(1523) The early form of this ancient proverb would seem to indicate that it originated along the Greek sea-shore, or perhaps some still older strand, where the stones, rolled about by the waves, were worn smooth and bare. Erasmus gives the Latin as "Saxum volutum, non obducitur musco" (A rolling stone gathers no moss), substituting musco for fucus, and giving the proverb the form it has ever since preserved. Another Latin form is "Lapis qui volvitur algam non generat." It is found in almost every language: The Italians say "Pietra mossa non fa muschio"; the French, "Pierre qui roule n'amasse point de mousse"; the Germans, "Wälzender Stein wird nicht moossig"; the Spaniards, "Piedra movediza nunca moho la cubija"; the Portuguese, "Pedra movediça, naō cria bolor"; etc., etc. As with so many proverbs, there was a medieval Latin jingle, "Non fit hirsutus lapis hinc alque inde volutas" (The rolling stone never grows a beard). Erasmus says nothing of the origin of the proverb—so far as known Lucian is the earliest one who recorded it—but he compares it with "Planta quae saepius transfertus non coalescit" (A tree often transplanted does not thrive), which he attributes to Fabius. See under TREE.

Grass grows not upon revolving stones.

SADI, Bustan. Ch. vi, Maxim 3. (c. 1250)

Selden Moseth the Merbelston that men ofte treden.

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers the Plowman. Text A, passus x, l. 101. (1362)

Thy head is alwaies working; it roles, and it roles, Dondolo, but it gathers no mosse.

JOHN MARSTON, The Fawn. Act i, sc. 2. (1606)

The proverb says . . . That stones, when rolling, gather little mosse.

UNKNOWN, A Vade Mecum for Malt-Worms. Pt. ii, p. 6. (1720)

A rolling stone's always bare of moss, as you say.

GEORGE COLMAN, SR., The Spleen. Act i. (1776)

"Roving stones gather no moss. Joe," said Gabriel. "Nor mile-stones much," replied Joe.

DICKENS, Barnaby Rudge. Ch. 3. (1841)

"Oh, John," said the minister, "I'm sure ye ken that a rowin' stane gathers nae fog [moss]." "Ay," said John, "but can ye tell me what guid the fog does to the stane?"

EDWARD B. RAMSAY, Reminiscences of Scottish Life. (1858)

We keep repeating the silly proverb that rolling stones gather no moss, as if moss were a desirable parasite.

SHAW, Misalliance: Preface. (1914)

A rolling stone gathers no moss, but a tethered sheep winna get fat.

F. C. BRIDGE, Cheshire Proverbs, p. 5. (1917)

If you do your rolling up-hill you will gather some moss.

6 I believe, Woman, said she, thou tellest me a Story.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Pamela, ii, 272. (1740)

You were always good children, and never told stories.

JOHN WESLEY, Journal, 21 March, 1770

Story, a softened term for a lie.

BAKER, Northamptonshire Glossary. (1854)

7 That's another story. (Alia res.)

TERENCE, Eunuchus, l. 361. (161 B. C.)

The story . . . is too long to be told now.

STERNE, Tristram Shandy. Bk. ii, ch. 18. (1759)
But that's in another book. (Allein es steht in einem andern Buch.)

GOETHE, Faust. Pt. i, sc. 6. (1806)

If the scientific man comes for a bone or a crust to us, that is another story.

RUSKIN, Sesame and Lilies. Pt. i, sec. 33. (1865)

But that's another story.

RUDYARD KIPLING, Soldiers Three: Mulvaney.
(1888) Frequently used by Kipling, who made the phrase famous.

8 A fish story! . . . In consequence of the shoals of whitefish which . . . choaked the channel . . . the steamboat could not pass.

UNKNOWN, The St. Louis Enquirer, 8 Dec., 1819
Exaggerations are often termed "fish-stories," for the reason, perhaps, that improbable tales are related concerning the denizens of the sea.

C. F. HOLDER, Living Lights, p. 97. (1887) The phrase, of course, derives from the habit of exaggeration which seems inseparable from fishermen. THE BIGGEST FISH ALWAYS GETS AWAY, see under FISH.

<sup>5</sup> Greene rushes for this straunger.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 3. (1546)

Before the introduction of carpets, the rushes on the floor were renewed for a visitor.

When you come you shall have greene rushes, you are such a straunger.

ROBERT GREENE, Menaphon, p. 85. (1589)

Ceremonies and green rushes are for strangers.

FRANCIS BACON, Promus. No. 118. (c. 1594)

If we had known of your coming, we would have strewn rushes for you.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. i. (1738)

He counted it a shame that a stranger should stand long at the gates. (νεμεσσήθη δ' ἐνὶ θυμῷ | ξείνον δηθὰ θύρῃσιν ἐφεστάμεν.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. i, l. 119. (c. 850 B.C.)

From Zeus are all strangers and beggars. (πρὸς γὰρ Διὶ εἰσιν ἅπαντες | ξείνοι τε πτωχοὶ τε.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. vi, l. 207. (c. 850 B.C.)

Pope puts this into a couplet: "By Jove the stranger and the poor are sent, | And what to those we give, to Jove is lent." In bk. xiv, l. 56, Homer elaborates the thought, "It were not right for me, even though one meaner than thou were to come, to slight a stranger: for from Zeus are all strangers and beggars. and a gift, though small, is welcome from such as we."

It is more disgraceful to turn out a stranger than not to admit him. (Turpius eicitur quam non admittitur hospes.)

OVID, Tristia. Bk. v, eleg. 6, l. 13. (c. A. D. 9)

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, iii, 5, 7. (1592)

Angry at the wagging of a straw.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 34. (1639)

He will go to law for the wagging of a straw.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 184. (1670)

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies of England, p. 149

(a. 1661) In the straw: in childbed; out of the straw: out of childbed.

You take care to send [cards] to all the lying-in ladies?—At their doors, Madam, before the first load of straw. (Reading his memo. as he exits). Ladies in the straw, ministers, etc.

JOHN BURGOWNE, The Heiress. Act i, sc. 1.

(1785) Burgoyne assumes that the proverb refers to the straw which was often spread in the street before a house where there was a confinement, to deaden the noise, but it is doubtful if this was the original meaning.

In the phrase of ladies in the straw, "as well as can be expected."

THOMAS DE QUINCEY, Confessions of an English Opium Eater (1823), p. 120. (1822)

They found the lady in the straw.

MARRYAT, Newton Forster. Ch. 15. (1832)

BALTASAR GRACIAN, Oráculo Manual. Maxim 164. (1647)

Take a straw and throw it up into the Air, you shall see by that which way the wind is.

JOHN SELDEN, Table-Talk: Libels. (a. 1654)

[He] well knew how to construe the wind by the direction of the straws.

LORD LYTTON, Rienzi. Act ii, sc. 3. (1835)

Such straws of speech show how blows the wind.

CHARLES READE, The Cloister and the Hearth. Ch. 56. (1860)

Bacon set forth these views as mere ballons d'essai, as straws to show him which way the wind blew.

SIDNEY LEE, Great Englishmen of the Sixteenth Century, p. 224. (1907)

A straw vote only shows which way the hot air blows.

O. HENRY, A Ruler of Men. (1907)

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 126. (1579)

To spend too much time in studies is Death.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Studies. (1608)

4 I respect no study, and deem no study good, which results in money-making. (Nullum suspicio, nullum in bonis numero, quod ad aes exit.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. 88, sec.1. (a. A.D.65)
We learn our lessons not for life, but for the lecture-room. (Non vitæ sed scholæ discimus.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. 106, sec.12. (c. A. D.64)

No profit grows where is no pleasure ta'en;

In brief, sir, study what you most affect.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew, i, 1, 39. (1594)

Study is like the heaven's glorious sun
That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks:
Small have continual plodders ever won
Save base authority from others' books.

A man of Abdera. (Ἀβδηρίτης.)
DEMOSTHENES, Orations, sec. 218: 10. (c. 340 B.C.) A blockhead.

You would swear he was born in the foggy air of Boeotia (Boeotum in crasso iurares aere natum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. i, l. 244. (20 B.C.)
Boeotia was proverbial for the stupidity of its inhabitants, as the city of Kampen is in Holland and Gotham in England.

It is a common expression of the country folk in this county, when they intend to character a dull, heavy, blundering person, to say of him, "he was born at Bloxham."

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies, ii, 288. (1662)

Shadwell alone of all my sons is he
Who stands confirm'd in full stupidity.
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,

SUCKER

<sup>13</sup> The nigger gave himself up for a gone sucker.

DAVID CROCKETT (?), Narrative of His Life: The Bear Adventure. (1834)

Sucker: A greenhorn; a dupe; an easy victim.

J. R. BARTLETT, Americanisms: Sucker. (1848)

A sucker is born every minute.

P. T. BARNUM (attr.), Maxim, supposed to be the result of his experience in the museum and show business. (c. 1850) The attribution has been questioned. But Barnum did say, "The American people like to be humbugged." The saying probably derives from the much older one, "A fool is born every minute." A sucker is a fool that bites at any bait.

Each second a sucker is born . . .

We've got to acknowledge the corn.

EUGENE F. WARE, A Triolet. (c. 1885)

I never skin a sucker without admiring the prismatic beauty of his scales.

O. HENRY, A Tempered Wind. (1908)

In the West a sucker is born every minute; but in New York they appear in chunks of roe

LORENZO DOW, Sermons. Bk. iii. (1856)

Sucker: U.S. Slang, a sponger, a parasite.

Oxford English Dictionary: Sucker. The older meaning as illustrated here, but, of course, not the American slang one. Even the O.E.D. falls down on American slang.

SUDS

<sup>2</sup> He . . . sought with victuall to supplie
Poore Myddleburgh which then in suddes did lie.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE, Posies. (1572) Works (1907), i, 161. In difficulties, or in disgrace.

Lett not any necessary . . . action lye in the suddes.

GABRIEL HARVEY, Marginalia, p. 87. (c. 1590)

But alas! . . . Our solace is in the suds.

JAMES MABBE, tr., Celestina (T.T.), p. 280. (1631)

He was left for a time in the suds, as they call it.

HENRY MORE, Conjectura Cabbalistica (1713), p. 230. (1653)

Away the frighted Spectre scuds,

And leaves my Lady in the Suds.

SWIFT, Death and Daphne, l. 99. (1730)

How, madam!—Why we are all in the suds, then!

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Sir Charles Grandison, i, 86. (1753)

This proves, lodicè, that you are in the suds; which is Anglice, that you will be hanged.

S. J. PRATT, Liberal Opinions. (1775)

SUFFERANCE

CHAUCER, Marchauntes Tale, l. 871. (c. 1386)

Suffrance hath euere be the beste

To wissen him that secheth reste, . . .

For suffrance is the welle of the Pes [Peace]

GOWER, Confessio Amantis, iii, 1639. (c. 1390)

SUICIDE

6 It does not hurt, Paetus. (Paetus, non dolet.)

ARRIA, wife of Caecina Paetus. (c. A. D. 50) He had been ordered to commit suicide because of cowardice, and when he hesitated, she took the dagger from him, stabbed herself, and held it out to him with the above remark. See PLINY, Epistles. Bk. iii, epis. 16.

7 If you must commit suicide, always contrive to do it as decorously as possible; the decencies, whether of life or death, should never be lost sight of.

GEORGE BORROW, Lavengro. Ch. 23. (1851)

8 Men in 10 are suicides.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1749. See also under GLUTTONY.

9 Suicide is not abominable because God forbids it; God forbids it because it is abominable.

IMMANUEL KANT, Lecture, at Königsberg. (1775)

10 Suicide, the supreme boon that God has bestowed on man among all the penalties of life. (Mortem consciscere, . . . quod homini dedit optimum in tantis vitae poenis.)

LIVY, Naturalis Historia. Bk. ii, ch. 5, sec. 27. (A. D. 77) "Felo de se" (Felony upon himself) is, of course, the legal phrase.

What, does he who is at liberty to leave the banquet when he will, and to play the game no longer, keep on annoying himself by staying? (ὃ γὰρ ἔξουσιν ἐξελεῖν, ὅταν θέλῃ, τοῦ συμποσίου καὶ μήκετι παίζειν, ἐτι οὗτος ἀνιάται μένων:)

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. ii, ch. 16, sec. 37.

(c. A. D. 100) An idea developed by many Greek and Roman writers.

To die, there wanteth but will. (A mourir, il ne reste que le vouloir.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 3. (1580)

The greatest gift nature has bequeathed us, the one which takes away from us all reason to complain of our condition, is that she has left us the key of the fields. (C'est de nous avoir laissé la clef des champs.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 3. That is, the ability to get out of the world whenever we wish. The French have three phrases, "Avoir la clef des champs" (To be free to go anywhere); "Donner la clef des champs" (To set someone at liberty); and "Prendre la clef des champs" (To run away, to decamp). In bk. i, ch. 22, Montaigne speaks of "Ceux qui ont la clef des champs" (Those who have the key of the fields).

But life, being weary of these worldly bars, Never lacks power to dismiss itself.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar, i, 3, 96. (1599)

We hold in our hands the power to end our sorrows, and he who is willing to die can brave any calamity. (Nous avons en nos mains la fin de nos douleurs, Et qui veut bien mourir peut braver les malheurs.)

CORNEILLE, Horace. Act iii, sc. 5. (1640)

We are in the power of no calamity while death is in our own.

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. lxx, sec. 16. (c. A. D. 64)
To be, or not to be: that is the question:
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them? . . .
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time, . . .

10 When two Sundays meet. i.e. Never. Ad
Graecas calendas.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 194. (1670)

Ray adds a Spanish proverb by way of illustration, "Quanto la rana tuviere pelo serdis bueno" (When the frog has hair you'll be good).

When two Sundays come together.

ELISHA COLES, Eng.-Lat. Dict.: Sunday. (1677)

To-morrow come never,

When two Sundays come together.

H. O. HALLIWELL, Proverb Rhymes. (1842)

SUN-DIAL

<sup>1</sup> What's a Sun-dial in the Shade good for?
 THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5507. (1732)
 Hide not your Talents, they for Use were made.
 What's a Sun-Dial in the Shade?

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1750.

<sup>2</sup> Horas non numero nisi serenas is the motto of a sun-dial near Venice. . . . Of all conceits it is surely the most classical, "I count only the hours that are serene."

WILLIAM HAZLITT, On a Sun-Dial. (c. 1820)
 "I number none but the cloudless hours,"

Its motto the livelong day.

W. C. DOANE, Of a Sun-Dial in Venice. (1901)
 A variation of this motto is, "Let others tell of storms and showers, I'll only mark your sunny hours." Another sun-dial motto often used is, "Vivite, ait, fugie" (Live ye, he says, I flee).

SUNFLOWER

<sup>3</sup> Because it turneth the leaues about wyth the Sunne, it is called Heliotropion, that is, turned wyth the sonne, or sonne flower.

WILLIAM TURNER, New Herball. Ch. 2. (1562)

Ah, Sunflower! weary of time,
 Who countest the steps of the sun.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Songs of Experience. (1794)
 The seal a sun-flower; "Elle vous suit partout,"
 The motto, cut upon a white cornelian.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan. Canto i, st. 198. (1818)
 "She follows you everywhere."

The sunflower turns on her god when he sets,
 The same look which she turn'd when he rose.

THOMAS MOORE, Believe Me, If All Those Endearing Young Charms. (a. 1852)

SUPERFLUITIES

<sup>4</sup> Superfluities do not hurt. (Superflua non nocent.)

ST. AUGUSTINE, De Civitate Dei. (c. 426)
 Quoted as a saying of "those skilled in the law."

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. iv, sec. 11. (c. A. D. 64)
 Superfluous things like these: doubtless the man who first called them "hindrances" had a prophetic foresight. (Quae sine dubio talia divinavit futura, qualia nunc sunt, qui primus appellavit "impedimenta.")

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. lxxxvii, sec. 11.

SOLON, Apothegm. (c. 600 B. C.) See ORELLI, Opuscula Graecorum Veterum, i. 168.

We rich men count our felicity to lie in superfluities, not in necessities.

SCOPAS OF THESSALY, Apothegm. (c. 400 B. C.)
 See PLUTARCH, Moralia: Love of Wealth.

Whoever heard a man of fortune in England talk of the necessities of life? Whether we can afford it or no, we must have superfluities.

JOHN GAY, Polly. Act i, sc. 1. (1729)

The superfluous, a very necessary thing. (Le superflu, chose très nécessaire.)

VOLTAIRE, Le Mondain, l. 21. (1736)

Necessaries always come before luxuries.

JEREMY BENTHAM, The Principles of Morals and Legislation. Ch. 18, sec. 17. (1780)

A rich man's superfluities are often a poor man's redemption.

GEORGE COLMAN, JR., Who Wants a Guinea? Act i, sc. 1. (1805)

Give us the luxuries of life, and we will dispense with its necessities.

J. L. MOTLEY, as quoted by HOLMES, Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 6. (1858)

SUPERIORITY

<sup>7</sup> To exhibit superior merit is not the way to win men's hearts. To exhibit inferior merit is the way.

CHUANG-TSZE, Philosophy. Ch. 8. (c. 400 B. C.)
 Giles, tr.

Superiority is always detested. (Siempre la superioridad fué aborrecida.)

BALTASAR GRACIAN, Oráculo Manual. Maxim. 7. (1647)

He who surpasses or subdues mankind,
 Must look down on the hate of those below.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iii, st. 45. (1812)

<sup>8</sup> The superior man is broad-minded and unprejudiced; the inferior man is prejudiced and not broad-minded.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. i. ch. 14. (c. 500 B. C.) Legge, tr. Giles takes exception to the phrase "superior man" as a translation of chün tzü, on the ground that it implies superciliousness, and prefers "princely man," or "higher type of man," or "nobler sort of man."

The superior man thinks of his character, the inferior man of his position.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. iv, ch. 11.

The superior man is concerned with what is right, the inferior man with what will pay.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. iv, ch. 16.

The superior man is calm and serene, the inferior man is worried and anxious.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. vii, ch. 36.

The superior man is friendly but not familiar; the inferior man is familiar but not friendly.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. xiii, ch. 23.

The superior man develops upwards, the inferior man develops downwards.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. xiv, ch. 24.

What the superior man seeks is in himself; what the inferior man seeks is in others.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. xv, ch. 20.

The superior man develops his personality by means of his wealth, the inferior man develops wealth at the expense of his personality.

UNKNOWN, Book of Rites (Likí). (c. 500 B. C.)

The superior man does not murmur against heaven.

MENCIUS, Discourses. Bk. ii, pt. ii, ch. 13, sec. 1. (c. 300 B.C.)

The superior man is great without being proud, the inferior man is proud without being great.

DOOLITTLE, Chinese Vocabulary, ii, 280. (1872)

He is truly a superior man who can look on in silence at a game of chess.

DOOLITTLE, Chinese Vocabulary, ii, 681.

Right moves the superior man, profit the mean man.

WILLIAM SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1417. (1875)

The superior man will stick to his bargain.

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1344.

The man with the large head is the superior man; the one with big feet is the inferior.

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1421.

The world . . . is only beginning to see that the wealth of a nation consists more than in anything else in the number of superior men that it harbors.

WILLIAM JAMES, Memories and Studies, p. 363. (1906)

1 The relation between superiors and inferiors is like that between the wind and the grass. The grass must bend when the wind blows over it.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. xii, ch. 19. (c. 500 B.C.) Quoted by MENCIOUS, Discourses, iii, i, 2. The Latin proverb is, "Maiori cedo" (I give way to a superior).

Any arrangements which . . . prevent superiority from profiting by the rewards of superiority and shield inferiority from the evil it entails—any arrangements which tend to make it as well to be inferior as superior—are diametrically opposed to . . . the reaching of a higher life.

HERBERT SPENCER, Data of Ethics. Ch. 11. (1879)

The relation of the superior to the inferior excludes good manners.

SHAW, Maxims for Revolutionists. (1903)

His inferiority complex hangs down over his shoes.

MANNING LONG, False Alarm, p. 187. (1943)

Alfred Adler is credited with inventing the phrase "inferiority complex."

A superiority complex quite often outlives the condition that brought it into existence.

ARTHUR STRINGER, The Devastator, p. 117. (1944)

2 There are men too superior to be seen except by the few, as there are notes too high for the scale of most ears.

EMERSON, Lecture on Table-Talk, 18 Dec., 1864.

3 No two men can be half an hour together but one will acquire an evident superiority over the other.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. See BOSWELL, Life. (1776)

The greatest proof of superiority is to bear with impertinence.

HAZLITT, Commonplaces. No. 19. (c. 1823)

4 It is an olde saieng. . . . Quae supra nos, nihil ad nos, Those things that are above our reach conserne us not.

PHILIP STUBBES, The Anatomie of Abuses, ii, i, 56. (1583)

His Aphorisms are too farre fetcht for me, and therefore, Quae supra nos, nihil ad nos.

ROBERT GREENE, Mourning Garment. (1616)

Quae infra nos nihil ad nos. The things that are below us are nothing to us.

RILEY, Latin Quotations, p. 353. (1860)

SUPERSTITION

See also Omen

5 I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. (κατὰ πάντα ὡς δεισιδαιμονεστέρους ὑμᾶς θεωρῶ.)

New Testament: Acts, xvii, 22. (c. A. D. 65) The Vulgate is, "Per omnia quasi superstitiosiores vos video."

Better be dumb than superstitious.

BEN JONSON, Elegy on My Muse, l. 73. (a. 1637)

All superstition from my breast repel.

JOHN GAY, Trivia. Bk. i, l. 175. (1716)

6 Superstition is the Reproach of the Deity.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Superstition. (1612)

The Master of superstition is the People; and in all Superstition, Wise Men follow Fooles.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Superstition.

There is a Superstition in avoiding Superstition.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Superstition.

7 Superstition consists in a senseless fear of the gods, religion in the pious worship of them. (Superstitio, in qua inest timor inanis deorum; religio, quae deorum cultu pio continetur.)

CICERO, De Natura Deorum. Bk. i, sec. 42. (45 B.C.)

The greatest burden in the world is superstition.

MILTON, Doctrine of Divorce. (1633)

Nothing but what is ominous, to the Superstitious.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 3659. (1732)

Superstition is the religion of feeble minds.

EDMUND BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France. (1790)

Superstition is the only religion of which base souls are capable. (La superstition est la seule religion dont soient capables les âmes basses.)

JOSEPH JOUBERT, Pensées. No. 27. (1810)

Superstition is . . . religion which has grown incongruous with intelligence.

TYNDALL, Fragments of Science. Ch. 2. (1871)

8 Superstition is the poetry of life. (Der Aberglaube ist die Poesie des Lebens.)

GOETHE, Sprüche in Prosa. (1819)

9 The Devil divides the world between Atheism and Superstition.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 1105. (1650)

<sup>1</sup> All people have their . . . superstitions.
CHARLES LAMB, Essays of Elia: Mrs. Battle's Opinions on Whist. (1823)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 12. (1580) Quoting a Greek proverb.

JOANNES JOVIANUS PONTANUS, Dialogus. (c. A. D. 395) Another saying which has passed into a proverb is, "Omnium pestium pestilentissima est superstitio" (Of all pests the most pestilent is superstition).

Not to rank nor sex confined
Is this vain ague of the mind.

WALTER SCOTT, Rokeby. Canto ii, st. 11. (1813)
Wisdom is communicated by contiguity, superstition, alas! by contagion.

J. M. STUART-YOUNG, Epigram. (1937)

<sup>4</sup> A great fear . . . is the parent of superstition; but a discreet and well-guided fear produced religion.

JEREMY TAYLOR, Holy Living, p. 317. (1650)

VOLTAIRE, Eryphile. Act iii, sc. 2. (1732)

Crush the infamous thing! (Écrasez l'infâme.)

VOLTAIRE, Letter to d'Alembert, 28 Nov., 1762.

The phrase is frequently encountered in Voltaire's letters of the period. In the one here quoted, Voltaire stated that by infâme he meant superstition, "not the Christian religion which I love and respect." However, he sometimes used it in such a way that it undoubtedly referred to Catholicism.

SUPPER

<sup>6</sup> If ever I ate a good supper at night,
I dreamed of the Devil, and waked in a fright.
CHRISTOPHER ANSTEY, New Bath Guide. (1766)

NICOLAS BRETON, Crossing of Proverbs, p. 8. (1616) RAY, p. 36; FULLER, No. 3216.

Light fare begets light dreams.

GEORGE BORROW, Lavengro, ii, 79. (1851)

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Disner. (1611)

He sups ill who eats all at dinner.

ERASMUS, Colloquia: De Ratione Studii. (1524)
See also under DINING.

<sup>10</sup> Eat few suppers and you'll need few medicines.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1742.
The Germans say, "Kurze Abendmahlzeit macht lange Lebenszeit" (Short supper makes long life).

JOHN FRITH, A Pistle to the Christen Reader (1829), p. 307. (1529) That is, go to hell.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 274. (1640) Herbert adds, "He wrongs not an old man that steals his supper from him," citing a Spanish proverb. See under AGE.

<sup>13</sup> To sup well, is to live well: and that's the way to sleepe well.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, Newes from the Lower End of the Table. (1613)

Who sups well sleeps well. (Chi ben cena, ben dorme.)

TORRIANO, Piazza Universale, p. 44. (1666)
However, a Spanish proverb says, "Por mucha cena, nunca noche buena" (For too much supper, never a good night).

<sup>14</sup> I never fared worse than when I wished for my supper.

That he must lose it.

OWEN MEREDITH, Clytemnestra. Pt. xx. (1855)

One thing at least is certain—this life flies.

EDWARD FITZGERALD, tr. Rubáiyát. St. 63. (1859)

That's certain as death and hay-fever.

PHILIP BARRY, You and I. Act i. (1923)

CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 562. (c. 1386)

It is good to be sure. Toll it again quoth the miller.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 91. (1678)

It is good to be sure, quoth the miller, when he moultered [took the toll] twice.

<sup>3</sup> Sure as the coat on your back.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 209. (1639)

As sure as the cloths on his back.

NATHAN BAILEY, Dictionary: Cap. (1736)

<sup>4</sup> That is sure which can be made sure. (Certum est quod certum reddi potest.)

SIR EDWARD COKE, On Littleton. (1628)

<sup>5</sup> Foure wayes there be, that no man can stand sure on, vpon moyst places, vpon yse, vpon glory and ambition, vpon the beaultie of a woman.

<sup>12</sup> As sure as God made little apples.

G. F. NORTHALL, Folk-Phrases. (1894) "I have always understood," Northall comments,

"that the full rendering was, 'As sure as God made little apples on big trees.'"

I'm gonna learn to read as sure as God made little apples.

MARY LASSWELL, Suds in Your Eye, p. 112. (1942)

I'll sell you out as sure as God made little apples.

JOHN SPAIN, Dig Me a Grave, p. 107. (1942)

THOMAS OTWAY, Caius Marius. Act iv, sc. 2.

(1680) It has been suggested that this proverbial phrase is a corruption of the logician's announcement of identity, "X is X."

Certainly, as eggs are eggs.

UNKNOWN, Vade Mecum for Malt-worms. Pt. ii, p. 48. (1720)

As sure as eggs is eggs, the bridegroom and she had a miff.

GOLDSMITH, Good-Natured Man. Act iv. (1768)

And the Bishop says, "Sure as eggs is eggs, This here's the bold Turpin."

DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 43. (1837)

I shall come out at bottom of the form as sure as eggs is eggs.

SURETY

3 Thy guarantee needs a guarantee.

Babylonian Talmud: Sukkah, fo. 26a. (c. 400)

Also, Gittin, 28b. Maimonides quotes the saying as "well known among the Arabs."

Two sureties are better than one. (Deux suretés valent mieux qu'une.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables. Bk. iv, fab. 13. (1668)

Your surety wants a surety.

JOHN RAY, Adagia Hebraica, p. 404. (1678)

4 Be not surety above thy power: for if thou be surety, take care to pay it.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), viii, 13. (c. 190 B. C.)

A good surety is for a hundred days, but an evil one is for a thousand thousand.

UNKNOWN, Alphabet of Ben Sira. No. 16. (c. 1000)

5 Give advice to all; but be security for none.

H.G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 361. (1855)

6 Act as surety and ruin is at hand. (ἐγγύα, ῥάπα δ' ἄρα.)

CHILON, Maxim. (c. 550 B. C.) DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Chilon, bk. i, sec. 73, states that this was Chilon's maxim, but PLATO, Charmides, sec. 165A, ascribes it to Thales of Miletus, and so does AUSONIUS, Ludus Septem Sapientum, l. 180, where he gives the Latin, "Sponde, noxa est praesto tibi." It was one of the three maxims inscribed on the wall of the temple of Apollo at Delphi. See under MODERATION.

Suretyship hath undone many of good estate, and shaken them as a wave of the sea.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxix, 18. (c. 190 B. C.)

The precept which has kept many from marrying, and many from trusting, and some even from speaking: Give a pledge and mischief follows. (ἐγγύα ῥάπα δ' ἄρα.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Dinner of the Seven Wise Men. Sec. 164B. (c. A. D. 95)

Those who give bail or bond appear at the bar of regret. (Praedes vadesque paenitudinis reos.)

AUSONIUS, Ludus Septem Sapientum, vii, 183. (c. A. D. 300)

Become surety, and danger is at hand. (Sponde, noxa praesto est.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. vi, No. 97.

(1523) Erasmus attributes the saying to Chilon, and traces a somewhat similar phrase back to Homer. Included by TAVERNER, Translations from Erasmus, fo. 21, with the rendering, "Be suretie for an other and harme is at hande." Erasmus gives the Greek as ἐγγύα ῥάπα δ' ἄρα.

7 The ax strikes the chisel and the chisel strikes the wood. (Fu 'tou ta tsao, tsao ta 'chai.)

JUSTUS DOOLITTLE, Chinese Vocabulary, ii, 181.

(1872) The creditor presses the surety, and the surety presses the debtor.

8 He that is surety for another must pay.

THOMAS DRAKE, Bibliotheca, p. 199. (1633)

He that will be surety shall pay.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 1089. (1640)

Of time the cautioner [surety] pays the debt.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 272. (1721)

He that is surety for another is never sure himself.

H.G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 389. (1855)

He who is surety is never sure.

SPURGEON, John Ploughman. Ch. 4. (1869)

9 Who that leaueth surety and leaneth unto chaunce,

Whan fooles pype, by auctoritee he maie daunce.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 11. (1546)

10 Enter not into bands, no not for thy best friends: he that payeth an other man's debt seeketh his own decay, it is as rare to see a rich surety, as a black Swan.

JOHN LYL, Euphues and His England (Arber), p. 229. (1580)

11 My son, if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger, Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth. (Fili mi, si spononderis pro amico tuo, defixisti apud extraneum manum tuam, illaqueatus es verbis oris tui.)

SURRENDER

<sup>11</sup> The Guard dies, but never surrenders. (Le garde meurt et ne se rend pas.)

GENERAL PIERRE JACQUES ÉTIENNE DE CAM-BRONNE, commander of a division of the French Old Guard at Waterloo (18 June, 1815), Retort, to Colonel Colin Halkett, commanding a British brigade, when summoned to surrender after being surrounded during the retreat which followed the battle.
A bit of bravado probably invented by a contemporary French journalist named Nicolas Balisson de Rougemont, who published an account of the incident in L'Indépendant, 20 June, 1815. Twenty years later, in an interview at his home in Nantes, Cambronne denied that he had used the phrase, and according to Lieutenant-Colonel Lemonnier-Delafosse, what he probably said was,
"Merde, je me ne rends pas." At any rate,
"le mot de Cambronne" as a euphemism for "merde" passed into French idiom (See
KASTNER AND MARKS, Glossary of Colloquial French, p. 71), and the French say simply "Cambronne" when they wish to avoid the coarser word. Henry Houssaye, in an article entitled Le Garde Meurt et Ne Se Rend Pas, in the Revue Politique et Littéraire for 17 and 24 Nov., 1906, deals at length with the origin of the phrase. See also Victor Hugo's long panegyric in his description of the battle of Waterloo in Les Misérables. Cosette, bk. i.

General Taylor never surrenders.

GENERAL ZACHARY TAYLOR, Reply, to the Mexican commander, Gen. Santa Anna, when summoned to surrender before the battle of Buena Vista, 22 Feb., 1847. Taylor won the battle next day against odds of four to one, and the phrase became the slogan of his successful campaign for the presidency in 1848. However, the Germans say, "Der Klügste giebt nach" (The wiser one surrenders), and "Nachgeben stillt allen Krieg" (Surrendering stops all war).

SWALLOW

<sup>5</sup>
Look, friends, don't you see a swallow? The herald of spring. (σκέψασθε, παῖδες· οὐχ ὁρᾷ; ὦρα νέα, χελιδών.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Knights, l. 419. (424 B.C.)
That requires more than one swallow, I'm thinking. (δεῖσθαι δ' εἰκεν οὐκ ὀλίγων χελιδόνων.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Birds, l. 1417. (414 B.C.)
A reference to the proverb, "One swallow will not make spring" (μία χελιδὼν ἔαρ οὐ ποιεῖ). A second clause is sometimes added, οὐδὲ μία μέλισσα μέλι (nor one bee honey). The proverb derives, like so many others, from one of Aesop's fables, this one the fable of The Spendthrift and the Swallow. A few warm days in winter brought a swallow from its hiding-place, and a young prodigal seeing it, sold his cloak and spent the proceeds in riotous living. But the frost returned, and he discovered, to his sorrow that "one swallow does not make summer."

One swallow does not make spring, nor does one fine day. (μία γὰρ χελιδὼν ἔαρ οὐ ποιεῖ, οὐδὲ μία ἡμέρα.)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. i, ch. 7, sec. 16. (c. 335 B.C.)

Not one day, nor one swallow, brings back spring. (Ver non una dies, non una reducit hirundo.)

MANTUANO, Somnium, v, 7. (c. 1500) Cited by PONTANUS, Collectio Proverbiorum, p. 226.

One swallow doesn't make spring. (Una hirundo non facit ver.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. vii, No. 93.

(1523) Included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, fo. 25, with the rendering, "It is not one swallow that bryngeth in somer," and the comment, "It is not one good qualitie that maketh a man good."

One swallow maketh not sommer, men saie.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1546)
One faire day assureth not a good Sommer, nor one flying Swallow prognosticateth not a good yere.

EDWARD HALL, Chronicle, p. 30. (1548)
As one swallow makes not sommer, so one particularity concludeth no generality.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 104. (1576)
The last phrase is perhaps original with Pettie. Gosson's Schoole of Abuse (1579) repeats it.

One swallow proveth not that summer is near.

JOHN NORTHBROOKE, Against Dancing. (1577)

Nay, soft (said the widow) one swallow makes not a summer, nor one meeting a marriage.

THOMAS DELONEY, Jacke of Newbery. Ch. 1. (1597)

One Swallow maketh not Summer; nor one Woodcock a Winter.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains, p. 329. (1605)
One swallow does not make summer. (Una golondrina sola no hace verano.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 13. (1605)
The Italians say, "Una rondine non fa primavera"; the Portuguese add a second clause, "Nem hum dedo faz mao, nem huma andorinha faz verao" (One finger does not make a hand); the French, "Une hirondelle ne fait pas le printemps"; the Germans, "Eine Schwalbe macht keinen Sommer." It is found in practically the same form, in nearly all languages.

One swallow makes no summer, neither ought it to prescribe a precedent unto others.

DANIEL ROGERS, Matrimonial Honour, p. 28. (1642)

One flower makes no garland.

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 63. (1875)

There are countless other variants. A Latin one is, "Unus homo non facit choream" (One man does not make a dance), from which the English, "One man does not make a team" is derived. The Portuguese say, "One grain fills not a sack"; the Armenians, "One flower does not announce spring"; the Chinese, "One actor cannot make a play"; the Italians, "One devil does not make hell," and so on endlessly.

A cold Sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part.

JOHN DRYDEN, tr., Juvenal, i, 253. (1693)

The cold sweat melted from their limbs.

S. T. COLERIDGE, The Ancient Mariner. Pt. iv, st. 8. (1798)

2

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread. (In sudore vultus tui vesceris pane.)

Old Testament: Genesis, iii, 19. (c. 550 B.C.)

Frequently misquoted, "In the sweat of thy brow thou shalt earn thy bread."

It is our Lords will that we eat our bread in the sweat of our bodies. (Nostre Seigneur veult que nous mangeons nostre pain en la sueur de nos corps.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. iv, ch. 24. (1548)

It was part of Adam's punishment, In the sweat of thy browes thou shalt eat thy bread.

JOHN DONNE, Devotions: Actio Laesa. (1624)

I am convinced, both by faith and experience, that to maintain one's self on this earth is not a hardship but a pastime, if we will live simply and wisely. . . . It is not necessary that a man should earn his living by the sweat of his brow, unless he sweats easier than I do.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden. Ch. 1. (1854)

Bendin' over a wash-tub, earnin' her bread by the sweat of her brow.

JOAQUIN MILLER, The Danites. Act ii. (1877)

3

His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. (καὶ ἕρπεντο ὡς ἰσχυρὸν αὐτοῦ ὡσεὶ θρόμβοι αἵματος καταβαλνυρτες ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν.)

New Testament: Luke, xxii, 44. (c. A.D. 65)

The Vulgate is, "Et factus est sudor eius, sicut guttae sanguinis decurrentis in terram."

This is the story of Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane, and is the origin of all phrases about "sweating blood" or "bloody sweat."

Ile sweate my blood out till I have him safe

MARSTON, Antonio and Mellida. Act iii. (1602)

Thou, who hast . . . sweat blood.

EDWARD YOUNG, The Last Day, i, 184. (1713)

Tears bitterer than the bloody sweat of Christ.

SHELLEY, The Cenci. Act i, sc. 1, l. 113. (1819)

Sweat of the brow; and up from that to sweat of the brain, sweat of the heart; . . . up to that "agony of bloody sweat" which all men have called divine.

CARLYLE, Past and Present. Ch. 3. (1843)

4

You live by the sweet of other men's sweat.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, ii, 138. (1576)

It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask a just God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces; but let us judge not that we be not judged.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Second Inaugural, 4 March 1865. Referring to slaveowners.

5

I hope no virtues, where I smell no sweat.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblems. Bk. ii, emb. 11. (1635)

6

It is not the part of a man to fear sweat. (Non est viri timere sudorem.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xxxi, sec. 8. (c. A.D. 64)

Sweat should flow only after toil. (Omnis sudor per laborem exeat.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. li, sec. 6.

7

I sweated like a bull in fly time.

W. G. SIMMS, The Forayers, p. 442. (1855)

Sweat one's guts out, a vulgar expression, meaning to work very hard.

BARÈRE AND LELAND, Slang Dictionary: Sweat. (1890)

SWEETNESS

8

Honey and all sweet things light up a man's eye.

Babylonian Talmud: Joma, fo. 83b. (c. 450)

All sorts of sweets are not wholesome.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 543. (1732)

Sweets are bad for the teeth.

9

This stripling began to be sweet upon her.

LAURENCE ECHARD, tr., Plantus: Preface. (1694)

A drunken bishop . . . was very sweet upon an Indian queen.

ADDISON, The Freeholder. No. 44. (1716)

10

My poesy was "The deeper, the sweeter."

BEN JONSON, Every Man in His Humour Act ii, sc. 4. (1596)

Stir it up with a spoon, miss; for the deeper the sweeter.

11

What is the Bread [which Moses gave the children of Israel to eat]? It is the word which the Lord ordained, and this Divine ordinance imparts both light and sweetness to the soul which has eyes to see.

PHILO JUDAEUS, Commentary on the Old Testament: Exodus (c. A.D. 39) Philo is speaking of the manna which was the food of the Israelites in the wilderness. See WAISII, Handy-Book of Literary Curiosities, p. 1043

Instead of dirt and poison, we have rather chosen to fill our lives with honey and wax, thus furnishing mankind with the two noblest of things, which are sweetness and light.

JONATHAN SWIFT, The Battle of the Books: Preface. (1697) Swift is telling an imaginary fable of Aesop about the bee and the spider, the bee representing the ancients and the spider the moderns.

The Greek word euphuia, a finely tempered nature, gives exactly the notion of perfection as culture brings us to conceive it; a perfection . . . which unites "the two noblest of things,"—as Swift, who of one of the two, at any rate, had himself all too little, most happily calls them in his Battle of the Books,—"the two noblest of things, sweetness and light."

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Culture and Anarchy. Ch. 1. (1869)

Culture has one great passion—the passion for sweetness and light.

ARNOLD, Culture and Anarchy. Ch. 1.

Culture is the passion for sweetness and light.

ARNOLD, Literature and Dogma. Preface.

(1873) Although Swift was the inventor of the phrase, "sweetness and light," it was Arnold who gave it its vogue.

SATIETY IN SWEETNESS, see under SATIETY.

II—Sweetness: Sweet and Sour

4 For how might ever sweetnesse have be knowe
To him that never tasted bitterness?

CHAUCER (?), Troilus. Bk. i, l. 638. (c. 1380)
He does not deserve the sweet who has not tasted the bitter. (Dulcia non meruit qui non gustavit amara.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. (1523) Included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, fo. 59, with the rendering, "He hath not deserved ye swete, whiche hath not tasted the sowre."
See also PONTANUS, Collectio Proverbiorum, p. 161.

Who that desyryth the swete to assaye,
He must taste byttyr, this is no naye.

UNKNOWN, Dialogues of Creatures, xxi. (c. 1535)
Indeede he had not descerud thys swete before he had tasted some sowere.

HENRY GOLDINGHAM, Garden Plot, p. 60. (c. 1575)

Hee is not worthy to sucke the sweete who hath not first savored the sowrer.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 61. (1576)
As by the bad is the good knowne, so by the sower is the sweet better discerned.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites: Ded. (1578)

The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.

SHAKESPEARE, All's Well that Ends Well, v, 3, 334. (1602)

For he hath no sweet merited (they say)

That hath not tasted of the sower by the way.

THOMAS CORVAT, Crudities, i, 109. (1611)

He deserves not the sweet that will not taste the sour.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 13. (1659)

RAY, p. 25; FULLER, No. 1834.

The bitter goes before the sweet. Yes, and for as much as it doth, it makes the sweet the sweeter

BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress. Pt. ii. (1684)

The little sweet doth kill much bitterness.

JOHN KEATS, Isabella. St. 13. (1818)

He has no taste for the sweet who hasn't tasted the bitter. (Non ha il dolce a caro Chi provato non ha l'amaro.)

CAHIER, Six Mille Proverbes, p. 176. (1856)

Those who have not tasted the bitterest of life's bitters can never appreciate the sweetness of life's sweets.

TACT

<sup>13</sup> Few persons have tact enough to perceive when to be silent.

SIR ARTHUR HELPS, Essays: Secrecy. (1841)
Without tact you can learn nothing. Tact teaches you when to be silent.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Endymion. Ch. 61. (1880)
Though the noblest disposition you inherit,
And your character with piety is pack'd,
All such qualities have very little merit

Unaccompanied by Tact.
HARRY GRAHAM, Tact. (a. 1936)

THEOPHRASTUS, Characters. No. xii, sec. 1. (319 B.C.) Or, as a Greek proverb has it, tact is, τὰ σκληρὰ μαλθακῶς λέγειν (To say harsh things soothingly).

He has about as much tact as an elephant's foot.
GILBERT FRANKAU, Air Ministry, Room 28, p. 139. (1942)

<sup>2</sup> To have the reputation of possessing the most perfect social tact, talk to every woman as if you loved her, and to every man as if he bored you.

OSCAR WILDE, A Woman of No Importance. Act iii. (1893)

TAG-RAG

<sup>3</sup> Your fathers were wyse, both tagge and rag.

SIR FRANCIS BYGON, A Treatise Concernynge Impropriations of Benefices. (c. 1535) A tag was originally one of the narrow, often pointed lacimiae or pendent pieces made by slashing the skirt of a garment; hence, any hanging ragged or torn piece. (O.E.D.) Tag-rag, the rabble, the riff-raff.

Al the rable of the shippe, hag, tag, and rag.

JOHN BALE, Vocacyon. (1553) In Harleian Miscellany, vi, 459.

[They] huntyd and kylled tage and rage with honds and swords.

HENRY MACHYN, Diary (Camden), p.50.(1554) To walles they goe, both tagge and ragge, their Citie to defend.

JOHN PARTRIDGE, Plasidas, l. 1041. (1566)

The rest of the band . . . tag and rag, cut and long tail.

ROBERT LANEHAM, A Letter (1871), p. 25. (1575) Horses and dogs with cut tails and long tails, hence all sorts of people.

Even their very dogs, Rug, Rig, and Risbie, yea, cut and long-taile, they shall be welcome.

ULPIAN FULWELL, Ars Adulandi. Sec. 1 (1579)

Euerye one . . . shall have an honest neighbour, tagge and ragge, cutte and longe tayle.

CHAUCER, The Reeve's Prologue, l. 24. (c. 1386)

Septimus liues, and is like garlick seene, For though his head be white, his blade is greene.

SIR JOHN DAVIES, Poems, ii, 32. (c. 1590)

The maidens mocke, and call him withered leeke, That with a greene tayle hath an hoary head.

BISHOP JOSEPH HALL, Byting Satyrs. Bk. iv, sat. 4. (1598)

Mine head is white, but, O, my taile is green.

WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT, The Ordinary. Act iii, sc. 1. (1651)

GABRIEL MEURIER, Trésor des Sentences. (c. 1550) Another form is, "Il n'y a si fort à escorcher que la queue."

There's the tail to be skinned yet. (Falta la cola por desollar.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 2 & 35.

(1615) The hardest part remains to be done.

Let the tail follow the skin.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 236. (1721)

<sup>7</sup> In effect (according to the proverb), To a dirty tail fails never ordure. (De faict, comme dict le prouerbe, à cul de foyrad tousiours abonde merde.)

<sup>8</sup> His tail will catch the kin-cough [whooping cough]. Spoken of one that sits on the ground.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Arcadia (1629), ii, 109 (a. 1586)

Such a haggarde as would turne taile to a full fist.

ROBERT GREENE, Euphues His Censure. (1587)

To turn tail . . . must needs be a foul fault.

ARCHBISHOP WILLIAM LAUD, in RUSHWORTH, Historical Collections, ii, 899

ROYAL TYLER, The Contrast. Act ii, sc. 2. (1790)

A long, severe, tail-on-end chase.

R. G. CUMMING, Five Years of a Hunter's Life in South Africa, i, 98. (1850)

<sup>1</sup> He claps his tail quivering beneath his belly.
(Caudam subiecit pavitantes utero.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. xi, l. 812. (19 B.C.) HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 52, gives the shorter form, "Caudem subiecit utero."

A wood hound . . . renneth; . . . with his tail bitwene hise leggis.

LANFRANK, Science of Cirurgie, p. 59. (c. 1400)
We shall have you back here very soon . . . with your tail between your legs.

W. E. NORRIS, Thirlby Hall. Ch. 12. (1884)

The only remaining course was to . . . sneak home with his tail between his legs.

DENNIS WHEATLEY, The Scarlet Impostor, p. 99. (1942) "I hope you'll . . . let me go home with my tail between my legs."—Ibid., p. 283. The French say, "S'en aller la queue entre les jambes."

UNKNOWN, Massachusetts Spy, 25 Aug., 1830.
"Ringtailed," something extraordinary or unusual.

I'm a ring-tailed squealer.

R. M. BIRD, Nick of the Woods, i, 56. (1837)

Ain't this a ring-tail squealer?

E. N. WESTCOTT, David Harum. Ch. 36. (1898)

A ring-tailed, rip-snorting hell-raiser.

W. A. WHITE, in Emporia Gazette, 13 Jan., 1914.

ALL TAIL, LITTLE TIT, see under BODY.

TAILOR

<sup>3</sup> Never trust a tailor that does not sing at his work; his mind is of nothing but filching.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, The Knight of the Burning Pestle. Act ii, sc. 8. (1611)

<sup>4</sup> Canning [a. 1827] says that three tailors of Tooley Street, Southwark, addressed a petition of grievances to the House of Commons, beginning—"We, the people of England." Hence the phrase is used of any pettifogging coterie that fancies it represents the vox populi.

E. C. BREWER, Dictionary of Phrase and Fable: Tailor. (1872)

The second German parliament [1850] . . . only contained delegates from Prussia and some of the other minor states. . . The Teutonic tailors of Tooley Street, so to speak, had again assembled

CHARLES LOWE, Prince Bismarck, ii, 25. (1885)

THOMAS CARLYLE. Title of book, 1833

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 48. (1605)
There are two or three variations, "del Cantillo," and "de la encrucijada" (The tailor of the crossroads). "El Sastre del Campillo" is the title of plays by Belmonte and Caudamo, and of a tale by Santos.

Like the Tailor, that sewed for nothing, and found thread himself.

QUEEN ELIZABETH, greeting a deputation of eighteen tailors. (a. 1603) See CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. iii, ch. 11.

They say three taylors go to the making vp of a man.

DEKKER AND WEBSTER, Northward Hoe. Act ii. (1607)

Two tailors goe to a man.

RICHARD TARLTON, Jests (Sh. S.), p. 20. (1611)

Like to nine Taylors, who if rightly spell'd, Into one man, are monosyllabled.

JOHN CLEVELAND, Poems, p. 23. (1615)

Some foolish knaue (I thinke) at first began The slander that three taylers are one man

JOHN TAYLOR, Works, p. 73. (1630)

Compos'd of many Ingredient Valours, Just like the Manhood of Nine Taylors.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto ii, l. 22.

(1663) It will be noted that at first there was uncertainty as to the number of tailors required, but it now settles consistently to nine.

Nine tailors make but one man.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 135. (1678)

Four and twenty tailors cannot make a man.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 108. (1721)

The Germans say, "Neun und neunzig Schneider gehen auf ein Pfund" (Nine and ninety tailors ought to weigh a pound), and add, "If they are lighter than that, they are not in good health."

[He] made her believe I was a tailor, and that she was going to marry the ninth part of a man.

SMOLLETT, Humphry Clinker, 18 July, 1771.

They say it takes nine tailors to make a man—apparently, one is sufficient to ruin him.

WALTER SCOTT, Letter, 26 July, 1819.

It takes nine tailors to make a man, but one can do a man up.

O. HENRY, The Clarion Call. (1908)

"Nine Tailors to make a man" is said to be really "nine tellers," "tellers" being the strokes . . . in a funeral knell or passing bell, 3 x 3 for male.

H. B. WALTERS, in Church Bells, p. 96. (1908)

In The Academy, 11 Feb., 1899, p. 190/1, is a note to the effect that in Dorset these strokes are said to be called tailors.

CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN, see under CLOTHES.

... we will never tell tales out of school.

MARY LAMB, Letters (Lucas), i, 315. (1805)
All attempts to make known school troubles and grievances were met with "Never tell tales out of school."

MRS. LINNAEUS BANKS, Manchester Man. Ch.
15. (1876)

To tell tales out of school. To give damaging information, to betray damaging secrets. In fairly common use, both literal and figurative, in C.
17-18; the literal sense has long been obsolete.

PARTRIDGE, Dictionary of Clichés: Tell. (1941)

I shudder as I tell it. (Horresco referens.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. ii, l. 204. (19 B.C.)
I could a tale unfold whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,

Thy knotted and combined locks to part
And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the fretful porpentine.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, i, 5, 15. (1600)

Listen to my tale of woe.

EUGENE FIELD, The Little Peach. (1890)

II—Cock-and-Bull Tales

A cock-and-bull tale or yarn or story is either a long, rambling, idle story, or an incredible one, concocted to deceive. So is a tale of a tub. A tale of Robin Hood is an extravagant fiction usually told as such. A Canterbury tale is a story founded on legend or tradition, designed to interest and amuse, and frequently long-winded. An old wives' tale is any marvelous story or rumor.

2 Canterbury Tales.

GEOFFREY CHAUCER. Title of a series of tales told by a group of pilgrims on their way to the shrine of Thomas à Becket at Canterbury, England. (1387)

We myght as well spende that tyme in reading of prophane hystories, or cantorburye tales.

THOMAS CRANMER, Seven Sermons, p. 49. (1549)
If we take it for a cantorburye tale, why doe
we not refuse it?

THOMAS CRANMER, Sermons: Rebellion.
To interpret these to be either fables and Canterbury tales, or true historical narrations.

EDWARD TOPSELL, The Historie of Serpents
(1658), p. 778. (1608)

I did not care for hearing a Canterbury tale.
RICHARD STEELE, The Tatler, 22 Dec., 1709

That foolish young girl held us all in a Canterbury story: I thought she would never have done.
DANIEL DEFŌE, Roxana. (1724) Works (1903)
xiii, 151.

others the product of a lively imagination.

THOMAS BROWN, Works (1760), ii, 94. (1702)
To set their hearers agape with an idle story of a cock and a bull.

ABRAHAM TUCKER, The Light of Nature Pursued, i, 430. (1770)

I've heard of stories of a cock and bull;

But visions of an apple and a bee!

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto vi, st. 80. (1823)

That sounds like a cock-and-bull story.

O. W. HOLMES, *The Autocrat of the Breakfast-
Table*. Ch. 5. (1858)

He told me a cock-and-bull story about his father's devotion to science.

3 Often the greatest talents lie unseen. (Saepè summa ingenia in occulto latent.)

PLAUTUS, Captivi, l. 165. (c. 200 B. C.)

Hidden music counts for nothing. (Occultae musicae nullum esse respectum.)

NERO, quoting a Greek proverb, when arranging to make his debut as a singer. (c. A. D. 58)

See SUETONIUS, Lives: Nero. Ch. 20, sec. 2. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vii, 83, with the form, "Occultae musicae, nullus respectus."

AULUS GELLIUS, Noctes Atticae, xiii, xxxi, 3, quotes the proverb, "Verbum illud scilicet e Graecia vetus, musicam quae sit abscondita, eam esse nulli rei" (Of course you know that old Greek saying, that music, if it be hidden, is of no account). Nero's meaning was that there was no point in his knowing how to sing unless he proved it by singing in public.

And I was afraid and went and hid thy talent in the earth. (καὶ φοβηθεὶς ἀπελθὼν ἔκρυψα τὸ τάλαντόν σου ἐν τῇ γῇ.)

New Testament: Matthew, xxv, 25. (c. A. D. 65)

The Vulgate is, "Et timens abii, et abscondi talentum tuum in terra."

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 177. (1678)

Talk is but talk; but 'tis money that buys land.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 346. (1678)
The later form, "Talk is cheap," does not seem to have come into use before 1800.

TALL

13 God is proud of those who are tall.

Babylonian Talmud: Becheroth. (c. 350)

14 A tall man lacks wisdom. (ἄνους ὁ μακρός.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. iii, cent. iv, No. 58. (1523) Citing a Greek proverb of which he gives the Latin, "Amens longus," and quoting Homer and Sophocles to prove that big men usually have small brains. Another form of the Latin, cited by BLAND, Proverbs, i, 54, is, "Homo longus raro sapiens" (A tall man is seldom wise). Bland quotes Livy, "Men of great stature and bulk appear more formidable than they are found to be on trial," but adds that in his experience the proverb has been more often contradicted than confirmed.

One whose cockloft is unfurnished. (Despourueu de sens.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. v, Prol. (1552)

Tall men are like houses of four or five stories, wherein commonly the uppermost room is worst furnished.

JAMES HOWELL, Familiar Letters, 2 Feb., 1621.

Francis Bacon quoted this proverb to King James, when the latter asked him what he thought of the French ambassador. Bacon at first said only that he was a tall proper man. "Yes, but what do you think of his head-piece?" the king persisted, and Bacon fell back on the proverb.

Often the cockloft is empty in those whom Nature hath built many stories high.

THOMAS FULLER, Andronicus. Sec. 6. (1646)

His cockloft is unfurnished, i. e. he wants brains.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 235. (1678)

His wit is lost in his length.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 389. (1817)

There's Bardus, a six-foot column of fop,

A lighthouse without any light atop.

THOMAS HOOD, Miss Kilmansiegg: Her First Step. (c. 1840)

Big and empty, like the Heidelberg tun. (Gross und leer, wie das Heidelberger Fass.)

R. C. TRENCH, On the Lessons in Proverbs, p. 50. (1853) A German proverb. The Spanish form is, "El grande de cuerpo, no es muy hombre" (He who is great of body is not a great man).

1
As tall as a May-pole.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 289. (1678)

Tall as a Poplar, taper as a Bole.

DRYDEN, tr., Vergil's Pastorals, vii, 54. (1697)

He is grown so high, that a man dares not come near him by the length of a may-pole.

BERTHELSON, Eng.-Dan Dictionary: May. (1754)

As tall as a hop-pole.

GEORGE COLMAN, JR., Ways and Means. Act i, sc. 2. (1788) TALL OF HIS HANDS, see under HAND.

TANTALUS

2
And I saw Tantalus in violent torment, standing in a pool, and the water came nigh unto his chin. He seemed as one athirst, but could not take and drink, for as often as he stooped down eager to drink, so often would the water be swallowed up and vanish away.

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xi, l. 582. (c. 850 B. C.)

Whence the proverbial phrase, Τάνταλου δίψα (The thirst of Tantalus).

Tantalus, thirsty wretch, catches at the streams that fly from his lips. (Tantalus a labris sitiens fugientia captat | flumina.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 1, l. 68. (35 B. C.)

He [Tantalus] seeks water in the midst of water, and catches at ever-escaping apples. (Quærit aquas in aquis et poma fugacia captat.)

OVID, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 2, l. 43. (c. 13 B. C.)

No water is obtainable to thee, Tantalus. (Tibi Tantale, nullae | deprenduntur aquae.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. iv, l. 458. (A. D. 7)

As the Apples that hang at Tantalus nose.

JOHN LVLV, Euphues (Arber), p. 396. (1580)

He gathereth fruits as they say, out of Tantalus his garden.

RICHARD HAKLUYT, Voyages (1809), p. 642.

(1599) He is tantalized.

To have seen this wench and not to enjoy her is such a tantalizing to me.

THOMAS NABBES, The Bride. Act iv, sc. 3. (1640)

TAPE

3
Drawing from his pocket a budget of papers, and untying the red tape.

WALTER SCOTT, Waverley. Ch. 71. (1814)

What a man that would be had he . . . the least knowledge of the value of red tape.

SYDNEY SMITH, referring to Sir James Mackintosh. (c. 1820) See HOLLAND, Memoir, p. 176.

Men . . . began to sneer at the red-tape minister.

LORD LYTTON, Alice. Bk. iii, ch. 1. (1838)

His brain was little better than red tape and parchment.

IRVING, Wolfert's Roost (1855), p. 274. (1840)

Calling at clubs, closeted with red-tapers.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sybil, p. 33. (1845)

All the morning at the custom-house, plagued with red tape.

LONGFELLOW, in Life (1891), iii, 141. (1869)

TAR

4
There was a touch of tar in this buxom dame.

ANNE PAGE, An Afternoon Ride, p. 68. (1897)

A touch of negro blood.

5
[He] was tarred wi' the same stick.

SCOTT, The Heart of Midlothian. Ch. 42. (1818)

They are a' tarr'd wi' the same stick.

SCOTT, Rob Roy. Ch. 26. (1818)

Tarred with the same brush.

WILLIAM COBBETT, Rural Rides, 31 Aug., 1823.

They are . . . all tarred with one brush.

R. D. BLACKMORE, Mary Anerley. Ch. 29. (1880)

Not for a moment did she look on it as tarring herself with the same brush.

FRANCIS ILES, Before the Fact. Ch. 13. (1932)

6
A robber convicted of theft shall be shorn like a hired fighter, and boiling tar shall be poured over his head, and feathers from a pillow shall be shaken out over his head.

UNKNOWN, Ordinance of Richard I, for the punishment of theft in the navy. (1189)

K[ing George III]: I see they threatend to pitch and feather you.

H[utcheson]: Tarr and feather, may it please your Majesty.

THOMAS HUTCHINSON, Diary, 1 July, 1774.

You must send the ministers tarred and feathered to America.

EDMUND BURKE, American Taxation. (1774)

If I escape from town without being tarred and feathered, I shall consider it good luck.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, in BRIDGE, Personal Recollections (1893), p. 114. (1850)

Tarred and feathered and carried in a cart

By the women of Marblehead.

J. G. WHITTIER, Skipper Ireson's Ride. (1857)

TARTAR

7
Take care not to catch one with a black rump. (μή του μελαμπύγου τύχη.)

ARCHILOCHUS, Fragment. (c. 650 B. C.) A black rump was considered the mark of a strong man. The epithet was applied to Hercules

Now thou hast got me for a Tartar,
To make me 'gainst my will take quarter.
SAMUEL BUTLER, Hudibras, i, iii, 865. (1663)
What a Tartar have I caught!
JOHN DRYDEN, The Kind Keeper. Act v, sc. 1.
(1678) To catch a Tartar is like having a bear by the tail: he can neither be controlled nor got rid of, or proves unexpectedly formidable.
Catching a husband is catching a Tartar.
CIBBER, Lady's Last Stake. Act ii, sc. 1. (1708)
To catch a Tartar, is said, among the Canting Varlets, when a Rogue attacks one that he thinks a Passenger, but who in his turn . . . robs and binds him.
B.E., A New Dictionary of the Canting Crew:
Tartar. (1725)
Went out fishing for a wife one day, and caught a Tartar.

Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation.

ABRAM S. HEWITT, Democratic platform, 1884.

<sup>5</sup> That the power to tax involves the power to destroy [is] not to be denied.

CHIEF JUSTICE JOHN MARSHALL, Decision, McCulloch v. Maryland, 1819. See Wheat., iv, 427, 431. Usually quoted, "The power to tax is the power to destroy." Marshall was agreeing with Daniel Webster, who, during his argument in the case, had said, "An unlimited power to tax involves necessarily, the power to destroy."

The power to tax carries with it the power to embarrass and destroy.

Supreme Court Decision, Evans v. Gore, 1920.

The power to tax is not the power to destroy while this court sits.

<sup>6</sup> The British Parliament has no right to tax the Americans. . . . Taxation and representation are inseparably united. God hath joined them; no British Parliament can put them asunder. To endeavour to do so is to stab our very vitals.

CHARLES PRATT, LORD CAMDEN, Speech, House of Lords, 1765.

We ought not to be quite so ready with our taxes, until we can secure the desired representation.

EDMUND BURKE, Observation on the Present State of the Nation. (1769) Works, ii, 138.

Taxation without representation is tyranny.

JAMES OTIS, Argument on the Illegality of the Writs of Assistance, before the Superior Court of Massachusetts, Feb., 1761. There is some doubt as to what Otis actually said, for the only record of his argument is a rough memorandum made by John Adams, who was present at the time, and the phrase does not appear in it. Fifty years later, Adams expanded his notes for TUDOR's Life of James Otis, and wrote Tudor, under date of 9 June, 1818, "Here he gave reins to his . . . philippic against the tyranny of taxation without representation." Tudor used this sentence in his biography (p. 77), without quotation marks, and added, "From the energy with which he urged this position, that taxation without representation is tyranny, it came to be a common maxim in the mouth of everyone." Morrison, in his sketch of Otis in the Dictionary of American Biography, xiv, 102, says, "What Otis said cannot now be recovered with any exactness. . . . 'Taxation without representation is tyranny' . . . appears only in Adams's final expansion of his notes."

The corruption of democracies proceeds directly from the fact that one class imposes the taxes and another class pays them. The constitutional principle, "No taxation without representation," is utterly set at naught.

W. R. INGE, Outspoken Essays, i, 11. (1919)

<sup>7</sup> Those who can do a good trade don't wrangle over taxes. ('Hui tso mai pu cheng ya shui.)

ZENOBIUS, Adagia, iv, 17. (c. A. D. 120) A proverb, dating from 415 B. C., when it was given as a reply to enquiries about the fate of the Athenians who failed to return from the disastrous expedition against Syracuse. School-teachers were, of course, slaves, so the reply meant that the man inquired for was either dead or captured and sold into slavery. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, x, 59, with the Latin, "Aut mortuus est, aut docet literas."

TEACHING

THOMAS ADAMS, Sermons (1861), ii, 488. (1629) A fencer had one trick in his budget more than he ever taught his scholar.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 127. (1639) He teacheth ill who teacheth all.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 4. (1659) RAY, p. 147; FULLER, No. 2035.

Reserve thy master-piece.

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs, p. 13. (1659) Reserve thy master-blow: i. e. teach not all thy skill, lest the scholar overreach or insult the master.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 20. (1813)

<sup>5</sup> We all love to instruct, though we can teach only what is not worth knowing.

JANE AUSTEN, Pride and Prejudice. Ch. 54. (1813) The proverbial form is, "Nothing worth knowing can be taught."

<sup>6</sup> Not only is there an art in knowing a thing, but also a certain art in teaching it. (Nam non solum scire aliquid artis est, sed quaedam ars etiam docendi.)

CICERO, De Legibus. Bk. ii, ch. 19, sec. 47. (46 B. C.)

It is always safe to learn, even from our enemies—seldom safe to venture to instruct, even our friends.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. i, No. 286. (1820) Examinations are formidable, even to the best prepared, for the greatest fool may ask more than the wisest man can answer.

TENNYSON, Scotch Song. (1827)

There are also tears of joy.

ALEXANDER BAIN, The Senses and the Intellect. Bk. ii, ch. 4, sec. 22. (1855)

Hence these tears. (Hinc illae lacrumae.)

TERENCE, Andria, l. 126. (166 B.C.) Quoted by HORACE, Epistles, i, xix, 41, and by CICERO, Pro Coelio, xxv, 61. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iii, 68. Horace spells the last word "lacrimae," and Erasmus "lachrymae." Horace's spelling is the one generally used. The phrase, which was first used literally by Terence, where Pamphilus shed tears of sympathy at the funeral of Chrysis, became proverbial and was used, as by Horace, even when there were no actual tears. Another proverbial phrase is, "Da veniam lacrymis" (Pardon these tears)

Hence rage and tears. (Inde ira et lacrimae.)

JUVENAL, Satires, i, 168. (c. A. D. 120)

Hinc illae lachrymae. Thence flows the cause o' the main grievance.

No time is this for tears. (Non lacrimis hoc tempus.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. xii, l. 156. (19 B.C.)

II—Crocodile Tears

Crocodile tears. (κροκοδείλου δάκρυα.)

AELIUS SPARTIANUS, Lives of the Emperors: Caracalla. (c. A. D. 300) Spartianus says that this is the sort of tears that Caracalla shed. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iv, 60, who gives the Latin, "Crocodilli lachrymae." PLINY (c. A. D. 75) had given an account of the crocodile in his Naturalis Historia, viii, xxv, 37, and so had SENECA, in his Naturales Quaestiones, iv, 2,—both highly imaginative.

The Crocodile shrowdeth greatest treason vnder most pitiful teares.

JOHN LYL, Euphues (Arber), p. 75. (1579)

Gloucester's show

Beguiles him as the mournful crocodile

With sorrow snares relenting passengers.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI, iii, 1, 226. (1590)

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears, Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello, iv, 1, 257. (1605)

I will neither yield to the song of the siren . . . nor the tears of the crocodile.

CHAPMAN AND MARSTON, Eastward Hoe. Act v, sc. 1. (1605)

It is the Wisdome of Crocodiles, that shed teares, when they would deuoure.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Wisdom. (1612)

To these crocodile tears they will add sobs.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy.

Pt. iii, sec. ii, mem. 2, subs. 4. (1621)

She's false, false as the tears of crocodiles.

SUCKLING, The Sad One. Act iv, sc. 5. (a. 1642)

Crocodiles wept tears for thee.

TENNYSON, A Dirge. St. 4. (1830)

Tell Alyattes, from me, to make his diet of onions. (ἔγὼ δὲ Ἀλυάττην κελεύω κρόμμυα ἐσθλαιν.)

BIAS, when Alyattes, King of Lydia and father of Croesus, sent to invite Bias to his court. (c. 610 B.C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS. Bk. i, sec. 84, who adds, ἴσον τῷ κλαλεῖν (That is, to weep).

Why these tears? There's such a smell of onions. (τί θῆτα κλάεις; κρομμύων δσφραίνουμαι.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Frogs, l. 654. (405 B.C.)

He has one eye streaming because he's eating an onion. (Caepe edundod oculus alter profluit.)

The weepy onion and tearful onion-peels. (FleBILE cepe lacrimosaeque tallae.)

LUCILIUS, Satires. Bk. v, frag. 216, Loeb. (c. 123 B.C.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia, sec. 353F, says the onion is not suitable for festivals because it causes tears in those who partake of it. See under ONION.

Megarians' tears. (Μεγαρέων δάκρυα.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. ii, cent. v, No. 20. (1523) The Latin is, "Megarensium lachrymae." Megara was celebrated for its onions.

To eat, or to smell, onions. (Cepas edere, aut olfacere.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, ii, 38. (1508) A jocular proverb, says Erasmus, used when anyone is seen to be crying.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift

To rain a shower of commanded tears,

An onion will do well for such a shift.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew: Induction, i, 124. (1594)

The tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, i, 2, 177. (1606)

I, an ass, am onion-eyed.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, iv, 2, 35.

Onions can make ev'n heirs and widows weep

<sup>1</sup> To weep at the tomb of a stepmother. (πρὸς τὸν μητρικῆς τάφον δακρύνειν.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. ix. No. 10.

Forced tears. (Lacrimas non sponte.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. ix, l. 1038. (c. A. D.

65) Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 37. Euripides speaks of δάκρυ ἀδάκρυα (Tearless tears)

III—Women's Tears

CATO (?), Disticha. Bk. iii, No. 20. (c. 175 B. C.)

<sup>3</sup> A woman laughs when she can, and weeps when she will. (Femme rit quand elle peut. Et pleure quand elle veut.)

RANDIE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Femme. (1611)

Another French form is, "Femme se plaint, femme se deult, Femme est malade quant elle veult" (Woman complains, woman mourns, woman is ill when she wills).

Women laugh when they can, and weep when they will.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 822.

(1640) RAY, English Proverbs, p. 50. (1670)

Its a custom of the sex to cry when they have sorrow, to weep when they have joy, and to shed tears whenever they find themselves without either.

TEMPER

<sup>8</sup> A Temper to bear much will have much to bear.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1752.

The too obliging Temper is evermore disobliging itself.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1752

<sup>9</sup> The waywardness of temper is even more strange than that of fortune. (Le caprice de notre humeur est encore plus bizarre que celui de la fortune.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 45. (1665)

Our tempers, like most buildings, may be said to have different aspects, some agreeable, others disagreeable. (On peut dire de l'humeur des hommes comme de la plupart des bâtiments, qu'elle a diverses faces; les unes agréables et les autres désagréables.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 292.

<sup>10</sup> It's a capital crime to lose one's temper. (Capital esse irascier.)

LUCILIUS, Satires. Bk. xxvi, frag. 664, Loeb. (c. 131 B. C.)

Give way to your temper an instant and you may rue it your whole life.

DOOLITTLE, Chinese Vocabulary, ii, 482. (1872)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Education of Children,

10C. (c. A. D. 95) There is a Hebrew proverb, "He who restrains his temper will have all his sins forgiven."

There are four kinds of tempers: he whom it is easy to provoke and easy to pacify—his loss disappears in his gain; he whom it is hard to provoke and hard to pacify—his gain disappears in his loss; he whom it is hard to provoke and easy to pacify is a saint; he whom it is easy to provoke and hard to pacify is a devil.

Babylonian Talmud: Pirké Aboth, v, 14. (c. 450)

<sup>12</sup> The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice, i, 2, 19. (1597)

Though I am not splenitive and rash,
Yet have I something in me dangerous.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, v, 1, 284. (1600)

<sup>13</sup> That good temper . . . so visible everywhere in France.

ARTHUR YOUNG, Travels in France, p. 69. (1792)

Good temper is an estate for life.

HAZLITT, Plain Speaker. Vol. ii, p. 106. (1826)

A good temper must be kept cool to retain its sweetness.

T. C. HALIBURTON, Wise Saws. Ch. 14. (1843)

TEMPERAMENT

<sup>1</sup> Temperament is a fate from whose jurisdiction its victims hardly escape, but do its bidding herein, be it murder or martyrdom.

A. B. ALCOTT, Tablets. (1868)

<sup>2</sup> The four temperaments are: 1. The melancholic or earthy; 2. The phlegmatic or aqueous; 3. The choleric or fiery; 4. The sanguine or ethereal.

JACOB BOEHME, Von der Geburt und Bezeichnung aller Wesen. (c. 1620)

The Choleric drinks, the Melancholic eats, the Phlegmatic sleeps.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 923. (1640)

The ancients classed individuals in one or more of four temperaments, founded on the hypothesis of four humours, . . . the red part [of the blood], phlegm, yellow, and black bile. . . . Hence were derived the names of the sanguine, the phlegmatic, the choleric, and the melancholic.

A. WALKER, Beauty in Woman, p. 202. (1936)

<sup>3</sup> Our temperatures differ in capacity of heat, or, we boil at different degrees.

EMERSON, Essays: Eloquence. (1870)

<sup>4</sup> It is often temperament which makes men brave and women chaste. (Le tempérament font souvent la valeur des hommes et la vertu des femmes.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 220. (1665)

TEMPERANCE

See also Moderation

<sup>6</sup> Temperance . . . is a kind of regimen into which every man may put himself, without interruption to business, expense of money, or loss of time.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Spectator, 13 Oct., 1711. Health, longevity, beauty, are other names for personal purity; and temperance is the regimen for all.

A. B. ALCOTT, Table Talk: Habits. (1877)

<sup>7</sup> We become temperate by abstaining from pleasures, and at the same time we are best able to abstain from pleasures when we become temperate. (ἐπιζόμενοι γὰρ καταφρονεῖν τῶν φοβερῶν.)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. ii, ch. 2. sec. 9. (c. 335 B.C.)

Temperance consists in forgoing bodily pleasures. (Temperantia autem constat ex praetermittendis voluptatibus corporis.)

CICERO, De Natura Deorum. Bk. iii, ch. 15, sec. 38. Temperance, that holdeth the mēne in alle thinges.

CHAUCEER, The Persones Tale. Sec. 73. (c. 1389) Temperance . . . is a moderate gouernaunce of reason, and also one of the car[di]nnall vertues.

RICHARD HULOET, Abcдарium Anglico Latium. (1551)

Temperance is a bridle of gold.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. ii, sec. ii, mem. i, subs. 2. (1621)

Temperance is the excellence of the will in controlling the passion for pleasure.

CARDINAL HENRY E. MANNING, The Internal Mission of the Holy Ghost. Ch. 10. (1875)

<sup>8</sup> The health of the soul is to have its faculties—reason, high spirit, and desire—happily tempered, with reason in command, and reining in both the other two, like restive horses. The special name of this health is temperance, that is thought-preserving (σωφροσύνη).

PHILO, De Virtutibus. Sec. 13. (c. A. D. 40) The phrase "restive horses" is an allusion to the famous parable in PLATO, Phaedrus, 253D, where the charioteer may be interpreted as reason (τὸ λογικόν), and the two horses as high spirit (τὸ θυμικόν) and desire (τὸ ἐπιθυμητικόν). It is so interpreted by PHILO.

Temperance is the nurse of chastity.

WYCHERLEY, Love in a Wood, iii, 3. (1672)

<sup>9</sup> Temperance and labor are the two best physicians of man. Labor sharpens his appetite and temperance prevents him from abusing it.

J.-J. ROUSSEAU, Émile. Bk. i. (1762)

Temperance is the best physic.

H.G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 495. (1855)

Temperance is the best medicine. (Optima medicina temperantia est.)

<sup>1</sup> Temptations hurt not, though they have access:

Satan o'ercomes none, but by willingness.

ROBERT HERRICK, Temptations. (1647)

The devil tempts us not—'tis we tempt him,
Reckoning his skill with opportunity.

GEORGE ELIOT, Felix Holt. Ch. 47. (1866)

<sup>5</sup> Blessed is the man that endureth temptation.
(μακάριος ἀνὴρ δι' ὑπομένει πειρασμόν.)

New Testament: James, i, 12. (A. D. 44) Vulgate
"Beatus vir, qui suffert tentationem."

<sup>6</sup> The life of man upon earth is a temptation.
(Tentatio est vita humana super terram.)

Old Testament: Job, vii, 1. (c. 350 B.C.) As quoted by THOMAS A KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi, i, 13. The Vulgate is, "Militia est vita hominis super terram." "Militia" means "warfare." The King James Version has "appointed time."

As long as we live in this world we cannot be without tribulation and temptation. (Quamdiu in mundo vivimus, sine tribulatione et tentatione esse non possumus.)

THOMAS A KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Bk. i, ch. 13. (c. 1420)

There is no order so holy, nor place so retired, where there are not temptations. (Non est aliquis Ordo tam sanctus, nec locus tam secretus, ubi non sint tentationes.)

THOMAS A KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi, i, 13.

<sup>7</sup> Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. (μὴ εἰσενέγκῃς ἡμᾶς εἰς πειρασμόν, ἀλλὰ ῥῦσαι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ.)

New Testament: Matthew, vi, 13. (c. A. D. 65)

Repeated in Luke, xi, 4. The Lord's Prayer. The Vulgate is, "Ne nos inducas in tentationem Sed libera nos a malo."

<sup>8</sup> 'Tis no sin to be tempted, but to be overcome.

WILLIAM PENN, Some Fruits of Solitude. No. 450. (1693)

Whoever stands to parley with temptation
Parleys to be o'ercome.

GEORGE LILLO, Fatal Curiosity. Act iii. (1736)

<sup>11</sup> The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, ii, 2, 163. (1604)

Many seek to fly temptations, and fall more grievously into them. (Multi quaerunt tentationes fugere, et gravius incident in eas.)

Fire tries iron, and temptation tries a just man. (Ignis probat ferrum, et tentatio hominem iustum.)

Temptation discovers what we are. (Tentatio aperit quid sumus.)

THOMAS A KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Bk. i, ch. 13. (c. 1420)

Never resist temptation: prove all things: hold fast that which is good.

SHAW, Maxims for Revolutionists. (1903)

<sup>13</sup> There are several good protections against temptation, but the surest is cowardice.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar. (1893)

Do you really think that it is weakness that yields to temptation? I tell you there are terrible temptations which it requires strength, strength and courage, to yield to.

OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband. Act ii. (1895)

There are temptations that require all one's strength to yield to.

ELBERT HUBBARD, The Philistine, xx, 86. (1905)

<sup>14</sup> The only way to get rid of a temptation is to yield to it.

OSCAR WILDE, Dorian Gray. Ch. 2. (1891)

I can resist everything except temptation.

THAMES

<sup>7</sup>
[He] won't set fire to the Thames, though he lives near the bridge.

SAMUEL FOOTE, Trip to Calais. Act iii, sc. 3. (1776) He will never do anything brilliant. A writer in Notes and Queries, 25 March, 1865, p. 249, suggested that this saying had nothing to do with the river Thames, but with "temse," a sieve made of horsehair, used for sifting grain. Fast workers would sieve so vigorously that the friction would sometimes cause the horsehair to smoulder, but a lazy worker would never set the temse on fire. O.E.D., however, says, "This conjecture has no basis of fact. The phrase has also been used of the Rhine (a. 1638) and other rivers." The American variant is, "He'll never set the North River on fire," North River flowing past New York City.

Whose modest wisdom, therefore, never aims

To find the longitude, or burn the Thames.

JOHN WOLCOT, Works (1795), i, 509. (1788)
He will not find out a way to set the Thames on fire; he will not make any wonderful discoveries, he is no conjurer.

FRANCIS GROSE, A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue: Thames. (1796)

The big thieves lead away the little one. (οἱ μεγάλοι κλέπτει τὸν μικρὸν ἀπάγουσι.)

DIOGENES, when he saw the officials of a temple leading away a man who had stolen one of the sacred vessels. (c. 350 B. C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Diogenes. Sec. 45. Another Greek proverb, cited by Erasmus, is, ὁ πολλὰ κλέψας ὀλίγα δοῦς ἐκφεύζεται (A big thief will give a little and escape). The Latin proverb is, "Parvus pendetur fur, magnus abire videtur" (The little thief is hanged, the big one is seen to escape).

No bad fish is a large one. (οὐδεὶς κακὸς μέγας ἰχθύς.)

CLEARCHUS, Fragments. (c. 300 B. C.) Quoted by ATHENAEUS, Deipnosophistae, viii; also by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iii, 92, "Nullus malus magnus piscis."

Petty sacrilege is punished, but sacrilege on a grand scale is honored by a triumphal procession. (Nam sacrilegia minuta puniuntur, magna in triumphis feruntur.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. lxxxvii, sec. 24. (c. A. D. 64) Or, as a Latin proverb puts it, "Quod licet Iovi non licet bovi" (That which is lawful for Jupiter is not lawful for the ox).

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, ii, 1, 20. (1604)

Great men may jest with saints: 'tis wit in them,
But in the less, foul profanation.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, ii, 2, 127.

Little thieves are hanged, but great ones escape.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 172. (1639)

It was formerly the complaint of a certain person,
"That the greatest thieves did execution upon the least."

WILLIAM SECKER, The Nonsuch Professor in His Meridian Splendor (1891), iii, 276. (1660)

Alas! we see that, since the dawn of time,
The Small have suffered for the Great One's crime.
(Hélas! on voit que de tout temps Les petits ont pâti des sottises des grands.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables. Bk. ii, fab. 4. (1664)

This is the fable of the frog who tried to interfere when two bulls were disputing over a young heifer.

The big thieves are pardoned and the little ones strangled. (Man thut halt die grossen Dieb perdoniren, und die kleinen stranguliren.)

ABRAHAM A SANCTA CLARA. Court preacher at Vienna. (c. 1675) This is his version of the older proverb, "Die kleinen Diebe hängt man, und die grossen lässt man laufen" (They hang the little thieves, the big ones are allowed to run free). It is an indication of how popular the rhymed form of any proverb was. The Germans also say, "Kleine Diebe henkt man, vor grossen zieht man den Hut ab" (Little thieves are hanged, but people take off their hats to great ones). Both these proverbs seem to have developed independently of the similar classical ones.

Nothing is more common than for Great Thieves to ride in Triumph, when the Little ones are punish'd.

SIR ROGER L'ESTRANGE, tr., Plutarch's Moralia. Bk. ii, ch. 7. (1678)

Thus goes the world, the little thieves hang for't, while the great ones sit upon the bench.

L'ESTRANGE, tr., Aesop. Fab. 498. (1692)

The great Thieves punish the little ones.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4565.

Robbers must exalted be,
Small ones on the Gallow-Tree,
While greater ones ascend to Thrones,
But what is that to thee or me?

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1748.

The law doth punish man or woman
That steals the goose from off the common,
But lets the greater felon loose,
That steals the common from the goose.

UNKNOWN. An 18th century epigram. See Notes and Queries. Ser. vii, 6, 469; 7, 98. Ser. viii, 10, 273. There are several versions, all prompted by the Enclosure Acts. This one was written when Sir Charles Pratt, First Earl of Camden, enclosed a strip of land in front of Camden House, 7 Oct., 1764.

Thieves at home must hang; but he that puts Into his overgorg'd and bloated purse
The wealth of Indian provinces, escapes.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. i, l. 736. (1784) There is a Dutch proverb, "Little thieves are hanged by the neck, great ones by the purse."

RAY, English Proverbs, p. 127. (1670)

The Thief is sorry to be hanged, but not that he is a Thief.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4788. (1732)

The Italians say, "Si trovano più ladri che forche" (There are more thieves to be found than gibbets).

II—Set a Thief to Catch a Thief

1 A thief myself, I know the tracks of a thief.
(φωρὸς δ' ἵχνια φὼρ ἔμαθον.)

CALLIMACHUS, Epigrams. No. xliv, l. 6. (c. 250 B. C.)

The thefe knoweth the thefe, and the wolfe the wolfe. (Furem fur cognoscit, & lupum lupus.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iii, 63. (1508) Taverner, tr., fo. 35. (1550)

One thiefe knoweth another.

THOMAS DRAXE, Bibliotheca, p. 108. (1633)

A Thief knows a Thief, as a Wolf knows a Wolf.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 430. (1732)

Rats know the way of rats.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 374. (1938) A Chinese proverb.

2 A theef of venisoun, that hath forlaft
His likerousnesse, and al his olde craft,
Can kepe a forest best of any man.

CHAUCER, The Phisician's Tale, l. 83. (c. 1387)

The greatest deer-stealers make the best park-keepers.

THOMAS FULLER, The Church-History of Britain. Bk. ix, Ch. 3. (1655)

There is a saying that an old poacher makes the best gamekeeper.

RICHARD JEFFERIES, The Gamekeeper at Home. Ch. 9. (1878)

3 Set a Cretan against a Cretan, as the saying is.
(πρὸς Κρήτα ὁ ἄρα, τὸ τοῦ λόγου, κρητίζω.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Lysander, xx, 2. (c. A. D. 110)

According to the old saying, Set a thief to catch a thief.

ROBERT HOWARD, The Committee. Act i. (1665)
Set a thief to take a thief.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 148. (1670)

Always set a knave to catch a knave.

THOMAS BROWN, Works (1760), ii, 244. (1702)

Set a thief to catch a thief is no bad maxim.

MARIA EDGEWORTH, The Absentee. Ch. 17.

(1812) There are many variants. GAYTON,

Pleasant Notes upon Don Quixot, p. 178, has,

"Set a fool to catch a fool." The Dutch say,

"He that would trick a peasant, must bring a peasant with him"; The French, "À fripon, fripon et demi" (To a rogue a rogue and a half); the Germans, "Schälke muss man mit Schälken fangen" (With a rogue you must catch a rogue); the Dutch, "Met dieven vangt men dieven" (With a thief one catches a thief), all these upon Cato's theory that the authors of great evils know best how to remove them. See under EVIL.

4 The words of a stammerer are best understood by a stammerer. (Balbum melius balbi verba cognoscere.)

SAINT JEROME (HIERONYMUS), Epistulae. (c. A. D. 400) As cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, ix, 77, who gives the proverb in a slightly different form, "Balbus balbum rectius intelligit." Similarly, "Barbarus barbari orationem."

When corsairs battle, Turk with Turk,
They're not about their proper work.

(Et le proverbe dit: Corsaires à corsaires, L'un l'autre s'attaquant, ne font pas leurs affaires.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables: Tribut Envoyé par les Animaux à Alexandre. Bk. iv, fab. 12. (1668)

There is a Spanish proverb, cited by Brantôme in his Life of André Doria: "Corsair against corsair, there is nothing to gain but some barrels of water" (Corsario à corsario, no hay que ganar que los barilles de agua).

III—The Receiver as Bad as the Thief

5 In the case of scandal, as in that of robbery, the receiver is always thought as bad as the thief.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 19 Oct., 1748.

6 Where there be no receiueurs, there be no theeues.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 12. (1546)

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains, p. 335. (1605)

From the Spanish, "No hay ladrón sin encubridor [concealer]."

There is na thief without a resetter.

FERGUSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 94. (c. 1595)

Every man this olde saide saw beleeves,

"Were no receivers there would be no thieves."

R. C., Times Whistle, p. 89. (c. 1615)

The receiver makes the thief.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 233. (c. 1615)

No receiver no thief.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 136. (1670)

7 He sins as much who holds the sack as he who fills it. (Autant pêche celui qui tient le sac que celui qui met dedans.)

GABRIELLE MEURIER, Trésor des Sentences. (c. 1500)

A similar one is, "He does as much who holds the foot as he who flays it"

(Autant fait celui qui tient le pied que celui qui escorche). The Germans say, "He who holds the ladder is as guilty as he who mounts the wall" (Wer die Leiter hält, ist so schuldig wie der Dieb).

8 Both are thieves, the receiver as well as the stealer. (ἀμφότεροι κλέπτες, καὶ ὁ δέξάμενος, καὶ ὁ κλέψας.)

PHOCLIDES, Gnome. (c. 550 B. C.) See STOBÆUS, Florilegium. The legal maxim is, "Qui facit per alium facit per se" (He who commits an act by another's agency, commits the act himself).

The receiver is as bad as the thief.

THOMAS FULLER, The Profane State. Bk. v, ch

4. (1642) SEDLEY, Mulberry Garden. Act iv.

II—Threat: A Few Classic Examples

<sup>9</sup> When you get back home your own mother won't know you. (οὐκ ἔρ' εἰσιόντα σ' οἶκαδ' ἡ τεκοῦσα γινώσκειται.)

ARISTOPHANES, Lysistrata, l. 636. (412 B.C.)

I will give you a Shirt full of sore Bones.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2637. (1732)

<sup>10</sup> I will raze you from the earth like a pine tree. (πίτυος τρόπον ἀπειλεε ἐκτρίψειν.)

HERODOTUS, History. Bk. vi, ch. 37. (c. 445 B.C.)

Croesus' warning to the men of Lampsacus, demanding the release of Miltiades, whom they had taken prisoner. A proverbial expression meaning utter destruction, for the pine once cut down never grows again.

Not so much as a firebearer must be left alive (ἔδει δὲ μὴδὲ πυρφόρον περιγενέσθαι.)

HERODOTUS, History. Bk. viii, ch. 6. Extermination. The person of the bearer of the sacred fire used for sacrifices was supposed to be inviolate.

<sup>11</sup> I'll fix my teeth in his liver and eat it up. (τοῦ ἐγὼ μέσον ἥπαρ ἔχοιμι ἐσθήμεναι προσφύσα.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. xxiv, l. 212. (c. 850 B.C.)

Quoted by PLUTARCH, Moralia, 170D.

On the spot he will cut thee limb from limb (ἵνα σ' αὐτὴ διὰ μελειστί τάμησιν.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xviii, l. 339. (c. 850 B.C.)

Make mincemeat of me. (Me excarnuifices.)

TERENCE, Heauton Timorumenos, l. 813. (163 B.C.)

There are many which will not sticke to teare him limme meale.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. i, p. 60. (1574) Pettie, tr.

O, that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal!

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline, ii, 4, 147. (1609)

Shakespeare's only use of "limb-meal," which he probably got from Pettie.

<sup>12</sup> Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in brine, Smarting in lingering pickle.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, ii, 5, 65. (1606)

For him at least I have a rod in pickle.

Three persons united against a town can ruin it.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 173. (1817)

One man with a dream, at pleasure,

Shall go forth and conquer a crown;

And three with a new song's measure

Can trample a kingdom down.

ARTHUR O'SHAUGHNESSY, Music-Makers. (1881)

Three men, together riding,

Can win new worlds at their will.

MARY CAROLYN DAVIES, Three. (1930)

<sup>3</sup> There are three things which do not let a man stay at home: smoke [a smoky chimney], dripping [a leaky roof], and an evil wife. (Tria sunt enim quae non sinunt hominem in domo permanere: fumus, stillicidium, et mala uxor.)

POPE INNOCENT III, De Contemptu Mundi. Pt. i, sec. 18. (c. 1210) A recasting of a proverb attributed with some show of reason to King Solomon, "Sunt tria damna domus: imber, fumus, mala femina" (There are three accursed things in a house: rain, smoke, an evil woman). It is, at any rate, a compilation from Proverbs, x, 26 (smoke); xix, 13 (the contentions of a wife); and xxvii, 15 (continual dropping and a contentious woman). There were many variations and elaborations during the Middle Ages, one into a thousand lines of Latin verse. See TAYLOR, The Proverb, p. 164.

Three things dryven a man out of his hous; that is to seyn, smoke, dropping of reyn, and wikked wywes.

CHAUCER, The Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 15. (c. 1387) For an elaboration, see LANGLAND,

Piers the Plowman, C, xx, 297.

Smoke, rain, and a wife without reason Chase a man from his house in every season.

(Fumée, pluie, et femme sans raison Chassent l'homme de sa maison.)

MEURIER, Trésor des Sentences. (c. 1500)

And Salamon sayth there be thynges thre, Shrewde wyues, rayne, and smokes blake Make husbandes ofte theyr houses to forsake.

UNKNOWN, Evyll Maryage, l. 96. (c. 1530) See HAZLITT, Early Popular Poetry, iv, 78.

There are three thinges that suffer not a man to abyde in his owne house, Smooke, Rayne, and an evil wyfe.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE, The Droomme of Doomes Day. (1576)

He is as tedious As a tired horse, a railing wife; Worse than a smoky house.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV, iii, 1, 159. (1597)

<sup>4</sup> There are three precious things, which I hold fast and prize. The first is gentleness; the second is frugality; the third is humility. Be gentle and you can be bold; be frugal, and you can be liberal; be humble, and you can become a leader among men.

LAO-TSZE, Tao-tek-king, Sec. 67 (c. 550 B. C.)

Threo thinges . . . beth needful . . . Bi rule and bi reason:

That on clothing is, from chele ow to saue:

And that othur mete at meel, for meseise of thiseluen:

And drink whon thou druuyest; but do hit not out of resun.

(Things three, no more, but three are needful:

The one is clothing, to save thee from chill,

The one is meat, for thy health's sake,

The third is drink when thou driest.)

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers the Plowman. Text A, passus i, l. 20. (1362)

Dryve fro your herte three things that been contrariouse to good conseil, that is to seyn, ire, coveitise, and hastifnesse.

CHAUCER, Tale of Melibeus, Sec. 17. (c. 1387)

Three things are unsatiable, priests, monckes, and the sea.

UNKNOWN, Philip and Mary. (c. 1560) In WRIGHT, Political Songs of England, p. 208.

Three things please both god and man, Concord betwene brethren, amitie betwene neighbours, agreement betwene man and wife.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites. Folio 23. (1578)

Three sortes of menne see nothing, The blinde without eyes, a foole without discretion, and he that delighteth in worldly pleasure, without feare of death.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 24.

From three things good lord deliver us, from an empty purse, from yl neighbours, and from an yl woman.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 30.

Of three thyngs beware, that is, of a Sicofant, of a flatterer, & of a presumptuous man.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 74.

Three things there be which neuer decay whiles the world lasteth, to bake, to brewe, and to powle or sheare, saye the people, or common prouerbe.

LEWIS EVANS, Withals Dictionary, sig. E4. (1586)

Three things are nought worth, fayre face in a whore,

Great strength in a porter, fine witt in the poore JOHN FLORIO, Second Fruites, p. 191. (1591)

There are three things that are not to be credited, a woman when she weeps, a merchant when he swears, nor a drunkard when he prays.

BARNABY RICH, The Ladies Looking Glasse, p. 34. (1616)

A ship under sail, a man in complete armour, and a woman with a great belly are three of the handsomest sights.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 2. (1659)
Three are too many to keep a Secret, and too few to be merry.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5037. (1732) See also under SECRET.

Three things are thrown away in a bowling-green, namely, time, money, and oaths.

WALTER SCOTT, The Fortunes of Nigel. Ch. 12. (1822) Quoted as a saying.

Three things cost dear: the caresses of a dog, the love of a mistress, and the invasion of a host. Three things only are well done in haste: flying from the plague, escaping quarrels, and catching flies.

H. G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 530. (1855) "The love of a dog and the caresses of a mistress" has been suggested as an improvement.

Three things are known only in three places: Valour, which knows itself only in war; Wisdom, only in anger; and Friendship, only in need.

EMERSON, Journal, 1863. Quoted as a Persian saying.

Three things are untameable, Idiots, women and the salt sea.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 8. (1875)

Three things that never come to no good: . . . Christmas pigs, Michaelmas fowls, and parsons' daughters.

Notes and Queries, vi, 246. (1882)

Three be the things I shall love till I die: Laughter and hope and a sock in the eye.

DOROTHY PARKER, Three Things I Love. (1930)

1 There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. (οι τρεις εις το εν εις εν.)

New Testament: I John, v, 7. (c. A. D. 110) The Vulgate is, "Quoniam tres sunt, qui testimonium dant in caelo: Pater, Verbum, et Spiritus sanctus: et hi tres unum sunt."

2 All things thrive at thrice. An encouragement to try the third time. They will say the third's a charm.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 26. (1721)
Number three is always fortunate.

TOBIAS SMOLLETT, Peregrine Pickle. (1750)
Quoted as a proverb. The Germans say, "Alle guten Dinge sind drei" (All good things are three). See also under LUCK.

3 Once upon a time there was a Man and his Wife and a Tertium Quid [a third somebody].

RUDYARD KIPLING, Traffics and Discoveries: At the Pit's Mouth. (1904) "Tertium Quid" is the title of the fourth book of BROWNING's The Ring and the Book.

4 There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough: The grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough. (Tria sunt insaturabilia, et quartum, quod numquam dicit: Sufficit. Infernus, et os vulvae, et terra, quae non satiat aqua: ignis vero numquam dicit: Sufficit.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxx, 15. (c. 350 B. C.)
There be three things neuer satisfied, and the fourth neuer saith ho, A woman that is vntemperate, the earth that is drie, Hel is neuer satisfied, and the fire hath neuer wood yenough.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 22. (1578)

5 There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not: The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid. (Tria sunt difficilia mihi, et quartum penitus ignoro: Viam aquilae in caelo, viam colubri super petram, viam navis in medio mari, et viam viri in adolescentia.)

Old Test.: Proverbs, xxx, 18-19. (c. 350 B. C.)
There been three things full harde to be knowne which waye they woll drawe. The first is of a bird sitting upon a bough. The second is of a vessell in the see. And the third is the waye of a younge man.

Reliquiae Antiquae, i, 233. (1417)

Ther be iiii thynges full harde for to know, Whyche way that thay will drawe. The first is the wayes of a yong man. The secunde the cours of a vessayll in the see. The thridd of an edder or a serpent sprent. The iiii of a fowle sittynge on any thyng.

Boke of St. Albans, sig. F4. (1486)

Young folke, as the wise man sayth, who, to the uncertaine flight of the Eagle in the ayre, of the ship on the sea, and of the serpent on the rocke, addeth, as most uncertaine, the way of a yong man in his first yeres.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 170. (1574) Pettie, tr.

There be three things that can not be knowne, & the fourth no man is able to vnderstand, The steps of an Eagle fleeing in the ayre, the waye of a Serpent ouer a Rocke, the path of a ship in the sea, and the life of a young man led in his youth

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 22. (1578)

There be triple ways to take, of the eagle or the snake,

Or the way of a man with a maid.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Long Trail. (1891) The Biblical form, "Tria sunt difficilia mihi" served as a model for many other aphorisms. For further examples see NICHOLAS BRETON, Figure of Foure; RIMALDO, Libro di Quattro Choses.

6 Upon three things the world rests: the study of the Law, divine service, and deeds of love.

SIMON THE JUST, Babylonian Talmud: Abodah Zara, i, 2. (c. 450)

Upon three things is the world established: truth, justice, peace.

Babylonian Talmud: Abodah Zara, i, 18.

1 I hate those who think that wisdom consists in prying and meddling; courage, in showing no compliance; and honesty, in denouncing other men.

TZU KUNG, CONFUCIUS, Analects, p. 70. (c. 500 B. C.) Giles, tr.

A yong man, a reowler, recheles;

A man cannot thrive except his wife let him.

DAVID FERGUSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 12. (c. 1595)

A man must ask his wife leave to thrive.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 117. (1670)

THRONE

14 Even on the highest throne of the world, we can sit only on our own tail. (Au plus eslevé throsne du monde, si ne sommes nous assis que sur nostre cul.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 13. (1595)

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, Sayings. (1816) GOURGAUD, Mémoires, i, 135. However, in 1814, addressing the French Senate, Napoleon said, "The throne is only a bit of gilded wood trimmed with velvet." See THIERS, Consulate and Empire, ch. 51.

<sup>2</sup> There is something behind the throne greater than the King himself.

WILLIAM PITT, Speech, 2 March, 1770. Hence "The power behind the throne."

A power behind the throne that was greater than the throne itself.

MARK TWAIN, Life on the Mississippi. Ch. 15. (1874)

If you want to be the power behind the throne, stay behind the throne.

JAY FRANKLIN, F.D.R. and His Friends. See Cosmopolitan, May, 1943, p. 45. Quoted as "the old saying."

SALLUST, Bellum Iugurthinum. Ch. 10, sec. 4. The legs of the throne are the plough and the oar, the anvil and the sewing-machine.

R. W. EMERSON, Journals, 1857.

A man may build himself a throne of bayonets, but he cannot sit on it.

DEAN W. R. INGE, Epigram. (c. 1900) See MARCHANT, Wit and Wisdom of Dean Inge.

THUMB

<sup>4</sup> He has a "green thumb," which simply means that he was born with the gift of making things grow.

MONTÉ BARRETT, Murder at Belle Camille, p. 45. (1943)

ROBERT BURNS, Ernest Cry and Prayer. (1786) It was lang syne, . . . and I'll ne'er fash my thumb about it.

SCOTT, Heart of Midlothian. Ch. 16. (1818) I'll not bother myself about it.

<sup>6</sup> I shal by my wille neuer more come in the kynges daunger, I haue now goten my thombe out of his mouth.

WILLIAM CAXTON, tr., Reynart the Foxe (Arber), xx, 49. (1481)

Never put your thumb between two back teeth. (Entre dos muelas cordales nunca pongas tus pulgares.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 43. (1615) Muelas cordales, the last pair of molars.

CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 565. (c. 1386) He weighed it in the scales every time he sold anything.

<sup>8</sup> Thy thumb is under my belt.

DAVID FERGUSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 98. (c. 1595) You are in my power.

THOMAS FLATMAN, Heraclitus Ridens. No. 40. (1681) To a hair.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1546) Eche finger is a thombe to day me thinke.

NICOLAS UDALL, Ralph Roister Doister. Act i, sc. 3. (c. 1550)

Ech finger is thumb.

When he should work, every Finger is a Thumb.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5556. (1732)

My hand's all vingers-an-thums.

GEORGE PILMAN, Rustic Sketches, p. 95. (1842)

His fingers are all thumbs, i.e. he is very awkward.

J. E. BROGDEN, Lincolnshire Words, p. 207.

(1866) "Clumsy" is perhaps a better word.

Leave it alone, all thumbs! why thee are as clumsy as a cow handling a musket.

F. T. ELWORTHY, West Somerset Phrase-Book, p. 395. (1886)

I think my fingers must be all thumbs.

A. T. QUILLER-COUCH, The Ship of Stars. Ch. 13. (1899)

<sup>11</sup> He who believes that you fall in with his pursuits, will with both thumbs eagerly commend your sport. (Utroque tuum laudabit pollice ludum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 18, l. 66. (20 B.C.)

A reference to the way in which the audience in the amphitheatre expressed approval. To turn down one thumb or shut it up in the fist (premere or comprimere pollicem), was also a sign of approval, but less emphatic.

They win applause by slaying with a turn of the thumb. (Verso pollice.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. iii, l. 36. (c. A.D. 120)

Contrary to the popular notion, the signal to dispatch a wounded gladiator in the Roman arena was to turn the thumb up, extend it, and perhaps whirl it around (vertere pollicem); to turn it down (premere pollicem), or close the fingers over it, was a sign that he was to be spared.

With thumb whirled around. (Converso pollice.)

PRUDENTIUS, Contra Symmachum. Bk. ii, l.

1098. (c. A.D. 400) More violent than verso.

To close down the thumb (premere) was a sign of approbation; to extend it (vertere, convertere; pollex infestus) a sign of disapprobation.

LEWIS AND SHORT, Latin Dictionary: Pollex. (1880)

They had universally turned their thumbs up. "Sartor," the publisher acquainted him, "excites universal disapprobation."

GARNETT, Life of Carlyle. Ch. 4. (1887)
"Thumbs down" means "spare him"; . . . the signal for death was "thumbs up."

THUNDER

See also Lightning

God of the thundercrap. (Διὸς Σκαταβάτου.)
ARISTOPHANES, Peace, l. 42. (421 B. C.) A play upon "Zeus, who descends in thunder" (Ζεὺς Καταβάτης). By adding a single letter, Aristophanes transforms it into "Zeus, who descends in ordure." A clever French translator makes it "Zeus Merdoyant," as opposed to the usual "Zeus Foudroyant." The Latin is "Jupiter tonans."

To Zeus belongs the thunder, not to me. (Βροντᾶν δ' οὐκ ἐμὸν ἀλλὰ Διός.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia. Sec. 54D. (c. A. D. 95)

Quoting a proverb from an unknown author.
O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus, ii, 3, 11. (1601)

What is the cause of thunder?

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear, iii, 4, 160. (1605) A question not yet convincingly answered.

1 Namore dorste he seyn

But "er that thonder stinte, comth a reyn."

CHAUCER, The Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 731. (c. 1388) Socrates, when his wife Xantippe, after berating him, threw the contents of a domestic vessel over him. Pope renders the line, "'Rain follows thunder,' that was all he said."

When it hath wel thundred, it must needes rayne. (Quando l'a ben tonato, è forza che pioui.)

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 33. (1578) Another Italian form is, "Non tuona mai che non piova" (It never thunders but it rains).

2 They steal my thunder!

JOHN DENNIS, when he heard the thunder he had devised for his play, Appius and Virginia, used a few nights after its failure in a production of Macbeth. (1709) Dennis's thunder was produced by rattling a sheet of tin.

Our author, for the advantage of this play [Appius and Virginia], had invented a new species of thunder, . . . the very sort that at present is used in the theatre. The tragedy itself was coldly received, notwithstanding such assistance, and was acted but a short time. Some nights after, Mr. Dennis, being in the pit at the representation of Macbeth, heard his own thunder made use of; upon which he rose in a violent passion and exclaimed, "See how the rascals use me! They will not let my play run, and yet they steal my thunder."

Biographia Britannica. Vol. v, p. 103. One of the few convincing explanations of the origin of a proverb.

I don't want to steal your thunder.

<sup>8</sup> There is a time for words and a time for sleep. (ὥρῃ μὲν πολλῶν μύθων, ὥρῃ δὲ καὶ ὕπνου.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xi, l. 379. (c. 850 B. C.) In bk. x, l. 394, He has, "There is time for sleep and time to take joy in hearing tales."

Now when it is time for him to set, he begins to seek pleasure; there is a time to love, and a time to wed, and a time to seek rest. (ὥρῃ ἐχρῆν δύνειν, νῦν ἀρχεται ἡδύνεσθαι, ὥρῃ ἐρᾶν, ὥρῃ δὲ γαμεῖν, ὥρῃ δὲ περᾶσθαι.)

TIMON, referring to Dionysius of Heraclea, a Stoic philosopher who deserted to the Epicureans in his old age. (c. 450 B. C.) Greek Anthology, x, 38, credits the second line to Dionysius.

There is . . . a time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted; A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up; A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance. . . . A time to love and a time to hate.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, iii, 1-8. (c. 250 B. C.) Variants upon this theme occur in every language.

For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business which
I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII, iii, 2, 144. (1612)

TIMES

All times are not alike. (No son todos los tiempos unos.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 35. (1615)

All times are essentially alike.

EMERSON, Public and Private Education. (1864)

One must move with the times. (Tempori serviendum est.)

CICERO, Ad Familiares. Bk. ix, epis. vii, sec. 1. (46 B. C.)

'Tis well to fit yourself to the times. (Tempori aptari decet.)

SENECA, Medea, l. 175. (c. A. D. 60)

Be a child o' the time.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, ii, 7. 105. (1606)

Accusing the Times is but excusing our selves.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 759. (1732)

These are the times that try men's souls.

THOMAS PAINE, The Crisis: Introduction, 19 Dec., 1776

The time is out of joint.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, i, 5, 189. (1600) Usually quoted, "The times are out of joint."

The times are big with tidings.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, Roderick. Sec. 20, l. 1. (1814)

Ah! stirring times we live in—stirring times!

THOMAS HARDY, Far from the Madding Crowd. Ch. 15. (1874)

I cannot but think that we live in a bad age, O tempora, O mores! as 'tis in the adage.

SWIFT, To Thomas Sheridan. (1718) See under MANNERS.

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. iii, l. 415. (19 B. C.)

Times change. (Tempora dum variant.)

COLUMBANUS, Carmen Monostichon, l. 39. (c. 600)

Times change and we change with them. (Tempora mutantur nos et mutamur in illis.)

HOLINSHED, Chronicle, fo. 99B. (1577)

The times are chaunged as Ouid saith, and we are chaunged in the times.

JOHN LVLV, Euphues (Arber), p. 142. (1579)

Time eateth all things, could old poets say;

The times are changed, our times drink all away

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1733.

Times change, she reminded herself, and with them people.

DOROTHY BOWERS, Fear and Miss Betony, p. 33. (1942) See also under CHANGE.

TIMIDITY

See also Bashfulness, Cowardice, Indecision

Woe unto timid hearts and faint hands.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus). ii, 12. (c. 190 B. C.)

Man is timid and apologetic; he is no longer upright; he dares not say "I think," "I am," but he quotes some saint or sage.

EMERSON, Essays: Self-Reliance. (1841)

To say no to a goose, see under Bo.

To them that flee cometh neither glory nor power. (φευγόντων δ' οὐτ' ἄρ κλέος δρύνται οὔτε τις δόξα.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. xv, l. 564. (c. 850 B. C.)

Men of no spirit never yet set up a trophy. (ἀλλ' οἱ γὰρ ἀθρομούντες ἄνδρες οὐ πότε τρόπαιον ἐστήσαντο.)

EUPOLIS, Fragment. (c. 425 B. C.) The ascription is by SUIDAS, Lexicon, and the saying is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, vi, 25. with the Latin, "Timidi nunquam statuerunt trophaeum," and by PONTANUS, Collectio Proverbiorum, p. 208, who credits it to Theocritus. It is included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, fo. 42, with the rendering, "Cowardes yet neuer wanne a fylde, or neuer had the victorie."

No one ever became immortal through cowardice. (Nemo ignavia immortalis factus.)

SALLUST, Bellum Iugurthinum. Ch. lxxxv, sec. 49. (c. 40 B.C.) The Spanish form is, "De cobardos, no hay nada escrito" (Of cowards no history is written).

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 414. (c. 43 B.C.) There is another Latin proverb, "Timidi mater non flet" (The timid man's mother does not weep), because she knows he is in no danger.

The timid see dangers which do not even exist. (Pericla timidus etiam quae non sunt videt.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 500. The Hindus say, "To the timorous the air is filled with demons." See under BUSH.

The timid man calls himself cautious, the sordid man thrifty. (Timidus se vocat cautum, parcum sordidus.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 699.

To the timid and hesitating everything is impossible because it seems so.

WALTER SCOTT, Rob Roy. Ch. 16. (1818)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. xv, sec. 1. (c. A. D. 116)

TINKER

<sup>4</sup> A tinker and a piper make bad music together.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 5. (1639)

<sup>5</sup> A tinkler's curse she did na care
What she did think or say.

JOHN MACTAGGART, Sir Balderdash. (1824) In The Scottish Gallovidian Encyclopedia: Balderdash.

Tinker's dam, a wall of dough raised around a place which a plumber desires to flood with a coat of solder. The material can be but once used; being consequently thrown away as worthless, it has passed into a proverb, usually involving the wrong spelling of the otherwise innocent word "dam."

EDWARD KNIGHT, The Practical Dictionary of Mechanics. (1877)

I care not a tinker's damn.

R. L. STEVENSON, St. Ives. Ch. 25. (a. 1894)

To swear like a tinker, see under SWEARING.

<sup>6</sup> Hoie tiftie toftie tinkers, good fellows thei bee,

In stoppyng of one hole thei vse to make three.

UNKNOWN, Common Conditions. (1576) In BRANDL, English Dramas before Shakespeare, p. 599.

In mending one hole, he had rather make three than want work.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, Characters: A Tinker. (1613)

Roome for a jovial tinker.

He stop one hole, and make three.

UNKNOWN, The Tinker of Turvey, p. 10. (1630)
Like Banbury Tinkers, who in stopping one hole, make two.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 14. (1659) RAY, p. 329; FULLER, No. 3227.

It comes at last to the tinker's work of stopping one hole and making ten.

L'ESTRANGE, tr., Aesop, p. 189. (1692)

You have mended as a tinker mends a kettle; stop one hole and make two.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. i. (1738)

TIT-FOR-TAT

MENANDER, The Eunuch. Frag. (c. 300 B.C.)

TERENCE, in his adaptation of Menander's play, l. 445, gives the Latin, "Par pro pari referto." ERASMUS, Adagia, i, i, 35, cites the proverb, "Par pari referre." PLAUTUS, Truculentus, ii, 47, has "Par pari respondet"

Answer him word for word, tit for tat. (Verbum verbo, par pari, ut respondeas.)

TERENCE, Phormio, l. 212. (161 B.C.)

Sens tyt for tat (quoth I) on euen hand is set
Set the hares head against the goose ichlet.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 4. (1546)

"Tit for tat" is apparently a variation of "tip for tap," one stroke in return for another. The French say, "Répondre du tac au tac."

Requite it tick for tacke.

RICHARD HULOET, Abcedarium, sig. B6. (1552)

That is tit for tat in this altracacion.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Spider and Flie. Ch. 37. (1556)

A tit for a tat as good every whilt as was brought.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Beau. (1611)

Like for like, pin driuing out pin, tint for taunt.

THOMAS GRANGER, Syntagma Logicum, p. 124 (1620)

Lill for loll: id est, one for another: as good as hee brought.

UNKNOWN, Berkeley MSS (1885), iii, 33. (1639)

Give him tint for tant.

WILLIAM WALKER, Paroemiologia, p. 29. (1672)

O.E.D. suggests that this may derive from "taunt for taunt."

Tint for tant, hit for hit, and dash for dash.

B.E., A New Dictionary of the Canting Crew, sig. M2. (1690)

I was threatened to be answered Weekly Tit for Tat.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Tatler. No. 229. (1710)

Tit for tat,

If you kill my dog, I'll kill your cat.

UNKNOWN, Nursery Rhyme. (c. 1750)

I'll give him a kick for a culp.

ROBERT FORBY, The Vocabulary of East Anglia, p. 427. (1830)

Tit for tat is fair play.

PARTRIDGE, Dictionary of Clichés: Tit. (1941)

St. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM, Adagia. (c. A.D. 390)

Ther is an old proverbe scith: that "the goodnesse that thou mayst do this day, do it; and abyde nat ne delaye it nat till to-morwe."

CHAUCER, Tale of Melibeus. Sec. 71. (c. 1387)

Whatsoever thou mayest do to nyght dyferre it not tyll to morowe.

MILES COVERDALE, The Christen State of Matrymony, sig. I3 (1541)

Deferre not vntil to morrow, if thou canst do it to day.

THOMAS DRAXE, Bibliotheca, p. 41. (1633)

Secretary Cecil . . . would ofttimes speak of himself, "It shall never be said of me that I will defer till to-morrow what I can do to-day."

JAMES HOWELL, Letters, 5 Sept., 1633.

No idleness, no laziness, no procrastination; never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 26 Dec., 1749

Chesterfield adds that this was the rule of "the famous and unfortunate Pensionary De Witt." The axiom is repeated in the letter of 5 Feb., 1750. It was one of Thomas Jefferson's ten "canons of conduct." See his letter to Charles Clay. (1817)

What you ought to do, don't put off till tomorrow; put your hand to it today. (A lo que tenéis de hazer, no diras cras; pon la mano, y haz.)

CHARLES CAHIER, Quelques Six Mille Proverbes, p. 252 (1856) A Spanish proverb

The Italians say, "Quel che puori far oggi non differirlo a domani" (What you can do today, never put off till tomorrow); the Germans, "Heute muss dem Morgen nichts borgen" (Today must borrow nothing of tomorrow).

Do not put off the work of this day till tomorrow.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 597 (1817)

Never do to-morrow what you can do to-day.

Do it tomorrow, do it the day after. (Cras agito, perendie agito.)

PLAUTUS, Mercator, l. 373. (c. 200 B.C.) "Cras" (tomorrow) is, of course, the root of "procrastination."

Come again tomorrow. (Cras redi.)

TERENCE, Adelphoe, l. 204. (160 B.C.)

It is better to abyde tyl to morowe.

WILLIAM CAXTON, tr., The Lyl of Charles the Grete, ii, ii, xi, 121. (1485)

There is a maxim, "Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day." It is a maxim for slug-gards. A better reading of it is, "Never do to-day what you can as well do to-morrow," because something may occur to make you regret your premature action.

AARON BURR, Maxim. (c. 1785) See PARTON, Life of Aaron Burr. Vol. i, p. 150.

Never do to-day what you can put off till to-morrow.

UNKNOWN, Punch (London), xvii, 241. (1849) Thirty years ago, when Mr. Webster at the bar or in the Senate filled the eyes and minds of young men, you might often hear cited as Mr. Webster's three rules: first, never to do to-day what he could defer till to-morrow; secondly, never to do himself what he could make another do for him; and, thirdly, never to pay any debt today. Well, they are none the worse for being already told, in the last generation, of Sheridan; and we find in Grimm's Mémoires that Sheridan got them from the witty D'Argenson.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Quotation and Originality. (1875)

PLUTARCH, Moralia, 146F, tells how Bias solved a problem set him by the king, who sent him an animal for sacrifice, with instructions to take out and send back to him the best and worst portion of the meat. Bias's solution was to take out the tongue and send it back. Bias was roughly contemporary with Anacharsis.

Speech contains both injuries and benefits in the largest measure. (ὥς καὶ βλάβας καὶ ὠφελείας τοῖς λέγειν ἔχοντος μεγίστας.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia. Sec. 38B. Plutarch is telling again the story of Bias and the tongue. Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing.

New Testament: James, iii, 10. (c. A.D. 44)

The rabbinical version of the tongue fable is founded upon this passage. See CLARKE Commentary. See also under MOUTH.

Both good and evil accrue from the tongue. When good nothing is better; when bad, nothing is worse.

Midrash: Leviticus Rabbah, xxii. YALKUT on Psalms, sec. 767, tells the story of the Rabbi who sent his servant to market to buy something good, and he brought back a tongue; on another occasion he sent him for some ordinary provisions, and again the servant brought a tongue. The astonished Rabbi demanded an explanation, and the servant answered, "Master, both good and evil accrue from the tongue." Evidently derived from Plutarch.

I have read that a king of Egypt, to prove the judgement of Solon, sent him a beast to sacrifice, injoyning him to choose out that part of the beast which he judged best, and that which hee judged worst, to sende backe unto him. Solon to accomplish the kings hestes, sent him only the tongue. And therefore the tongue is rightly compared to the sterne of a shippe, which beeing the least parte of it, yet is it of force to save or sinke the shippe.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 122. (1574) Pettie, tr. It will be noted that the same story is told of several different people.

The tongue is the instrument of the greatest good and greatest evil that is done in the world.

II—The Cutting Tongue

<sup>8</sup> Werse is the stroke of a tonge than the stroke of a spere.

WILLIAM CAXTON, tr., The Fables of Aelian, xiii. (1484)

A stab with the tongue is worse than a stab with a lance. (Tel coup de langue, est pire qu'un coup de lance.)

LE ROUX DE LINCY, Proverbes Français. (1859)

De Lincy cites a number of French proverbs about the tongue. "A mortal stab lies in a poisonous tongue" (Coup mortel gist en langue infecte); "In the tongue lie life and death" (En la langue gist la mort et la vie). The Spanish form is, "La lengua del mal amigo mas corta que cuchillo" (The tongue of a bad friend cuts more than a knife).

<sup>9</sup> Her tong is no edge toole, but yet it will cut.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 10. (1546)

The tongue is not steel, yet it cuts.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 837. (1640)

The Tongue is not Steel, yet it cuts sorely.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4797. (1732)

A sharp tongue is the only edged tool that grows keener with constant use.

WASHINGTON IRVING, Rip Van Winkle. (1819)

PHOCILIDES, Gnomes. No. 124. (c. 551 B. C.)

The tongue is sharper than the sword's edge. (πολλὴν ἔχον στόμωσιν.)

SOPHOCLES, Oedipus at Colonus, l. 795. (c. 408 B. C.)

Many have fallen by the edge of the sword: but not so many as have fallen by the tongue. (Multi ceciderunt in ore gladii, sed non sic quasi qui interierunt per linguam suam.)

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxviii, 18. (c. 190 B.C.)

Right as a sword . . . a tongue cutteth.

CHAUCER, The Maunciples Tale, l. 236. (c. 1386)

1 An evil tongue is sharper than a glayue.

EARL RIVERS, tr., Dictes and Sayenges of the Philosophirs, fo. 25. (1477) Quoted as a saying of Solon.

The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen

As is the razor's edge invisible,

Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen

Above the sense of sense.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, v, 2, 256.

(1609) The Germans say, "Die Dornen, die Disteln, sie stechen gar sehr, Doch stechen die Altjungfernzungen noch mehr" (Thorns and thistles sting very sore, but old maids' tongues sting more).

2 I like not the sharp edge of thy tongue. (οὐ γάρ μ' ἀρέσκει γλῶσσά σου τεθηγμένη.)

SOPHOCLES, Ajax, l. 584. (c. 409 B.C.)

3 Swords are madmen's tongues, and tongues are madmen's swords.

SWIFT, Ode to Dr. Sancroft, l. 14. (1690)

III—The Soft Tongue that Breaks Bones

1 The stroke of a whip maketh a mark, but the stroke of a tongue breaketh bones. (Flagelli plaga livorem facit: plaga autem linguae comminuet ossa.)

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxviii, 17. (c. 190 B.C.) Oesterley, tr.

Man's tongue is soft, and bone doth lack;

Yet a stroke therewith may break a man's back.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1740

A soft tongue may strike hard.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1744.

Under the tongue men are crushed to death.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 379. (1938) A Chinese proverb.

5 A soft tongue breaketh the bone. (Lingua mollis confringet duritiam.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxv, 15. (c. 350 B.C.)

Ofte tunke brekit bon theih ne hadde him selue non.

UNKNOWN, Proverbs of Alfred, l. 460. (a. 1250)

Tonge breketh bon, and nath hire-selue non.

UNKNOWN, Proverbs of Hendyng, xix. (c. 1300)

For men sein that the harde bon,

Althogh hiselven have non,

A tunge brekth it al to picces.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. iii, l. 465 (c. 1390)

Toung breaketh bone, it selfe bauyng none.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1546)

The tongue breaketh bone, though itself have none.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 26. (1670)

The Tongue breaketh the Bone, tho' it hath none it self.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4795. (1732)

The tongue has no bones, but breaks bones. (ἡ γλῶσσα κόκκαλα δὲν ἔχει, καὶ κόκκαλα συντρίβει.)

NEGRIS, Modern Greek Proverbs, p. 50. (1831)

The Spanish form is, "La lengua no ha osso, e osso fa rompere."

IV—Tongue and Teeth

6 One man uses his tongue, another his teeth. (Aliis lingua, aliis dentes.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, ii, 72. (1523)

7 Since I cannot govern my own tongue tho' within my own teeth, how can I hope to govern the tongues of others?

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1738.

8 The tongue is soft, and remains; the teeth are hard, and fall out.

HART, 700 Chinese Proverbs. No. 667. (1937)

9 The tongue walks where the teeth speed not.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 107. (1640)

10 Nature has built about none of our parts so stout a stockade as about the tongue. (καίτοι γ' οὐδὲν οὕτως ἡ φύσις εὐερκῶς κεχαράκωκε τῶν ἐν ἡμῖν ὡς τὴν γλῶτταν.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia. Sec. 503C. (c. A.D. 95)

The Holy One, blessed be He, said to the tongue. All the limbs of man are erect but you are horizontal; they are all outside the body but you are inside. More than that, I have surrounded you with two walls, one of bone and the other of flesh.

Babylonian Talmud: Arachin, fo. 15b. (c. 450)

My sone, god of his endeeles goodness

Walled a tonge with teeth and lippes eke,

For man sholde him ayvise what he speke.

CHAUCER, Maunciple's Tale, l. 218. (c. 1389)

We may see the cunning and curious work of Nature, which hath barred and hedged nothing in so strongly as the tongue, with two rowes of teeth, and therewith two lips, besid[e]s she hath placed it farre from the heart that it should not vtter that which the heart had conceiued.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 146. (1579)

It seemeth (saith Bias) that nature by fortifying the tongue would teach how precious and necessary a virtue silence is; for she hath placed before it the bulwark of the teeth.

ROBERT GREENE, Penelope's Web. (1587)

11 Wasn't your tongue a little too long for your teeth just now?

CHARLES READE, Love Me Little, Love Me Long Ch. 10. (1859)

12 I can keep my tongue within my teeth sometimes.

JOHN TATHAM, The Rump. Act i, sc. 1. (1660)

I shall keep my tongue between my teeth.

WILLIAM WALKER, Paroemiologia, p. 18. (1672)
[They] have the wit yet to keep their tongues betwixt their teeth.

Potter is angry with potter, craftsman with craftsman, beggar is jealous of beggar, and minstrel of minstrel. (κεραμεὺς κεραμεῖ κοτεῖ καὶ τέκτονι τέκτων, καὶ πτωχὸς πτωχῷ φθονεῖ καὶ δοιδὸς δοιδῶ.)

HESIOD, Works and Days, l. 25. (c. 800 B.C.)
Quoted by PLUTARCH, Moralia, 92A; PLATO,
Lysis, 215C; ARISTOTLE, Rhetoric, ii, iv, 21;
ii, x, 6. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, ii, 25, with the Latin, "Figulus figulo invidet, faber fabro." Included by TAVERNER, Translations from Erasmus, fo. 9, with the rendering,

"The potter enuieth the potter, the smythe the smythe."

Hesiod spoke inexactly when he said "Potter is angry with potter, joiner with joiner," for not only are men jealous of fellow-craftsmen and those who share the same life as themselves, but also the wealthy envy the learned, the famous the rich, and, by heaven, free men and patricians regard with wondering admiration and envy successful comedians in the theatre, and dancers and servants in the courts of kings.

PLUTARCH, Moralia: On Tranquillity. Sec.
473A. (c. A.D. 95)

I am for free commerce with all nations.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to Elbridge Gerry.
(1799)

Free trade is one of the greatest blessings which a government can confer on a people.

MACAULAY, Essays: Milsford's History of Greece (1824)

The call for free trade is as unavailing as the cry of a spoiled child for the moon. It never has existed; it never will exist.

HENRY CLAY, Speech, U.S. Senate, 2 Feb., 1832.

Free trade is not a principle, it is an expedient.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech on Import Duties, 25 April, 1843. Two years later, in a speech delivered 17 March, 1845, Disraeli applied the same phrase to protection, "Protection is not a principle, but an expedient."

1 Let all trades live. Spoken when we have broken an utensil, which must employ a tradesman to mend it.

5 Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear, iv, 1, 40. (1605)

II—Every Man to His Trade

6 Let every man stick to his trade. (ἑκάστος εἰδελὴ τέχνην.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Wasps, l. 1431. (422 B.C.)

See SHOEMAKER: SHOEMAKER, STICK TO YOUR LAST.

What I advise is that each contentedly practise the trade he understands. (Quam scit uterque libens censebo exerceat artem.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 14, l. 44. (20 B.C.)

Cherish the little trade which thou hast learned and be content therewith. (τὸ τέχνην, ὃ ἔμαθες, φίλει, τούτῳ προσαναπαύου.)

MARCUS AURELIUS, Meditations. Bk. iv, sec. 31. (c. A.D. 174)

Every man to his business.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV, ii, 2, 85. (1597)

BEHN, The False Count. Act i, sc. 2. (1682)

Every man to his trade, quoth the boy to the Bishop. A Bishop asked a cabin boy if he could say his prayers; he asked the Bishop if he could say his compass, the Bishop said, No; Why, then, says the boy, Every man to his trade.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 97. (1721)

FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 1435. (1732)

Each one to his own trade. (Chacun à son métier.)

J. P. C. FLORIAN, Fables: Le Vacher et le Garde-Chasse. (1788) Sometimes a second clause is added, "et les vaches sont bien gardées" (and the cows will be well looked after).

Every man to his craft, says the proverb, the parson to the prayer-book, and the groom to his curry-comb.

WALTER SCOTT, Kenilworth. Ch. 11. (1821)

Leave the business to him who knows the trade. (Bisogna lasciar far il mestiere a chi sa.)

CHARLES CAHIER, Six Mille Proverbes, p. 198.

(1856) An Italian proverb. The French say

"Laissons faire le métier à qui le sait" (Let him who knows how do the work)

7 The watchman should watch and the lover love. (τὸν φρουρὸν φρουρεῖν χρὴ, τὸν ἐρώντα δ' ἐρᾶν.)

MACARIUS, Adagia, viii, 39. (c. A.D. 400)

He ought to holde the oore yt hathe lerned it. (Oportet remum ducere, qui didicit.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. ii, No. 76.

(1508) Taverner, tr., fo. 11. (1550) Taverner adds: "That is to saye: Euerye man must practyse that science and facultie, that hath ben afore taught hym. Let not the shomaker medle further then his shoes. Lette the ploughman talke of his plough."

Stick to your brewery, and you will be the great brewer of London. Be brewer, and banker, and merchant, and manufacturer, and you will soon be in the Gazette.

NATHAN ROTHSCHILD, to Sir Thomas Buxton in his youth. (c. 1800) See EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Power.

No one extracts the oil but the oil-presser.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 624. (1817) The dung-beetle puts its strength into rolling its ball of dung.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 357. (1938) A Chinese proverb. The Chinese also say, "Beat your gong and sell your candles," and "Even a mole may instruct a philosopher in the art of digging."

TRADITION

<sup>1</sup> The tradition of all past generations weighs like an Alp upon the brain of all living.

KARL MARX, 18th Brumaire. (1852)

Tradition wears a snowy beard.

J. G. WHITTIER, Mary Garvin. (1860)

Tradition is . . . the vis inertiae of history.

FRIEDRICH ENGELS, Socialism, Utopian and Scientific. (1880) There is a Hebrew proverb, "Tradition is the fence of the law."

Tradition, thou art for suckling children,
Thou art the enlivening milk for babes,
But no meat for men is in thee.

STEPHEN CRANE, Tradition. (1895)

<sup>2</sup> The tradition of the elders. (τῆν παράδοσιν τῶν πρεσβυτέρων.)

New Testament: Matthew, xv, 2. (c. A. D. 65)
The Vulgate is, "Traditionem seniorum."

TRAGEDY

<sup>3</sup> A perfect Tragedy is the noblest production of human nature.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Spectator. No. 39. (1712)

<sup>4</sup> Tragedy represents the life of princes; comedy serves to depict the actions of the people.

FRANÇOIS D'AUBIGNAC, La Pratique de Théâtre. (c. 1660)

All tragedies are finish'd by a death.

All comedies are ended by a marriage.

LORD BYRON, Don Juan. Canto iii, st. 9. (1820)
One can play comedy; two are required for melodrama; but a tragedy demands three.

ELBERT HUBBARD, Book of Epigrams. (a. 1917)

<sup>5</sup> Tragedy is in the eye of the observer, and not in the heart of the sufferer.

EMERSON, Natural History of Intellect: The Tragic. (a. 1882)

<sup>6</sup> Attic tragedies of stateliest and most regal argument.

JOHN MILTON, Of Education. (1644)

Tragedy must be something bigger than life, or it would not affect us.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 23 Jan., 1752.

There can be no tragedy without a struggle

FERDINAND BRUNETIÈRE, Questions de Critique. Ch. 1. (1888)

Your true right tragedy is enacted on the stage of a man's mind, and with the man's reason as sole auditor.

J. B. CABELL, Cream of the Jest, p. 236. (1917)

<sup>7</sup> There is something infinitely mean about other people's tragedies.

OSCAR WILDE, Picture of Dorian Gray. (1891)

In this world there are only two tragedies. One is not getting what one wants, and the other is getting it. The last is much the worst; the last is the real tragedy.

WILDE, Lady Windermere's Fan. Act iii. (1892)

There are two tragedies in life. One is not to get your heart's desire. The other is to get it.

SHAW, Man and Superman. Act iv. (1903)

TRANQUILLITY

<sup>8</sup> Looking tranquillity!

CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act ii, sc. 1.

(1687) BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st.

146. (1812) LAMB, A Quaker Meeting. (1823)

<sup>9</sup> There is no such thing as perpetual Tranquillity of mind, while we live here.

THOMAS HOBBS, Leviathan. Pt. i, ch. 6. (1651)

<sup>10</sup> Tranquillity comprehends every wish I have left, and I think I should not even ask what news there is.

HORACE WALPOLE, Letter to Sir Horace Mann, 22 Feb., 1771.

Tranquillity is the old man's milk.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to William Short.

(1814) In another letter, he adds, "Tranquillity is the summum bonum of age."

Tranquillity! thou better name

Than all the family of Fame!

S. T. COLERIDGE, Ode to Tranquillity. (a. 1834)

Passionless bride, divine Tranquillity.

TENNYSON, Lucretius, l. 265. (1868)

TRANSLATION

<sup>11</sup> Nor ought a genius less than his that writ Attempt translation.

SIR JOHN DENHAM, To Sir Richard Fanshawe. (c. 1650)

<sup>12</sup> A distinction must be made amongst translators between cobblers and workmen.

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies of England. (1662)

Translators: sellers of old mended shoes and boots, between cobblers and shoemakers.

FRANCIS GROSE, A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue. (1785)

ST. JEROME, referring to the Latin translations of the Bible before the Vulgate. (c. 400)

[An] Italian proverb . . . Traduttori, traditori, . . . Translators, traitors; so untrue are they very often to the genius of their original.

TRENCH, Lessons in Proverbs. Ch. 1. (1853)

1
Translations increase the faults of a work and spoil its beauties. (Les traductions augmentent les fautes d'un ouvrage et en gâtent les beautés.)

VOLTAIRE, La Poésie Épique. Ch. 2. (1726)

It is impossible to translate poetry. Can you translate music?

VOLTAIRE, Letter to Mme. de Defand, 19 May, 1754.

Translation is at best an echo.

GEORGE BORROW, Lavengro. Ch. 25. (1851)

Everything suffers by translation except a bishop.

V. S. LEAN, Collectanea, iii, 461. (1902)

TRAP

2
And I right now have founden al the gyse,
With-oute net, wher-with I shal him hente.

CHAUCER (?), Troilus. Bk. iv, l. 1370. (c.1380)

It is easie to fall into a Nette, but hard to get out.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 394. (1580)

'Tis easy to fall into a Trap, but hard to get out again.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5072. (1732)

The further in the deeper.

DAVID M. MOIR, The Life of Mansie Wauch.

Ch. 20. (1824)

3
The mouse is caught in the trap. (Decipula murem cepit.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, iv, 92. (1523)

The old monkey is caught at last. (Anus simia sero quidem.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, v, 14. (1508) "The old rat comes to the trap at last."

4
Unless a man knows how to set a trap he knows not how to fear one. (Ni qui scit facere insidias nescit metuere.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 459. (c.43 B. C.)

5
You're deceived in old Gomez, he understands trap.

UNKNOWN, Counterfeits. Act iii, sc. 1. (1679)

He knows his own interest.

We understand trap, sir, you must not catch old birds with chaff.

GEORGE FARQUHAR, Love and a Bottle. Act iii. (1699)

[They] looked as if they had understood trap this twenty years.

EDWARD WARD, The London Spy, p. 148. (1700)

[She] understood trap as well as any woman in the Mearns.

WALTER SCOTT, The Pirate. Ch. 4. (1821)

"To be up to trap," to be cunning in business, to be sharp-witted in promoting self-interest.

WILLIAM CARR, The Dialect of Craven, ii, 217. (1828)

A clever, ready witted fellow up to all sorts of trap.

SAMUEL LOVER, Handy Andy. Ch. 2. (1842)

TRAVEL

See also Journey

6
A man that hath travelled knoweth many things.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxxiv, 9. (c. 190 B. C.)

What maketh the foolish wise? yea, what increaseth wit and augmenteth skill but travel? in so much that the fame Ulysses won was not by the ten years he lay at Troy, but by the time he spent in travel.

ROBERT GREENE, The Card of Fancie. (1587)

He that travels far knows much.

JOHN CLARKE, Paraemologia, p. 276. (1639)

RAY, English Proverbs, p. 149. (1670) The French say, "Il ne sait rien qui hors ne va"

(He knows nothing who never goes out).

He that travels much knows much.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2335. (1732)

He who never leaves his country is full of prejudices. (Chi non esca dal suo paese, vive pieno di pregiudizi.)

GOLDONI, Pamela. Act i. (c. 1770)

Travelling is the ruin of all happiness. There's no looking at a building here after seeing Italy.

FRANCES BURNEY, Cecilia. Ch. 2. (1782)

Travelling makes a man wiser, but less happy.

JEFFERSON, Letter to Peter Carr. (1787)

What's travel,

Unless it teaches one to quote and cavil?

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xiii, st. 47. (1820)

7
That man travels to no purpose who sits down alone to his meals.

JOHN DAVIS, Travels of Four Years and a Half in the United States. Ch. 2. (1802)

8
Travel teaches toleration.

DISRAELI, Contarini Fleming. Pt. v, ch. 7. (1832)

The traveled mind is the catholic mind.

A. B. ALCOTT, Table Talk: Travel. (1877)

9
If you will be a traueeller . . . haue alwayes the eies of a faulcon, . . . the eares of an asse, . . . the face of an ape, . . . the mouth of a hog, . . . the shoulder of a camell, . . . the legges of a stagg . . . and see that you neuer want two bagges very full, that is, one of pacience . . . and another of money.

JOHN FLORIO, Second Frutes, p. 93. (1591)

TORRIANO, Piazza Universale, p. 157. (1666)

The Germans say, "The heaviest baggage for a traveller is an empty purse."

A traueeller must haue the backe of an asse to bear all, a tung like the tayle of a dog to flatter all, the mouth of a hog to eat what is set before him, the eare of a merchant to heare all and say nothing.

THOMAS NASH, Works (Grosart), v, 141. (1594)

Traueeller must haue the head of a philosopher, . . . the heart of a lyon, . . . the mouth of a swine, . . . the eyes of a hawke, . . . the backe of an asse, . . . the legges of a camell, . . . and the vigilancy of a cocke.

T. GAINSFORD, Rich Cabinet, fo. 147. (1616)

We in England vulgarly say, that a traveller to Rome must have the back of an ass, the belly of a hog, and a conscience as broad as the king's highway.

FYNES MORYSON, An Itinerary, iii, i, 49. (1617)

He that wants legs, feet, brains, and wit,

To be a traveler is most unfit.

JOHN TAYLOR THE WATER-POET, A Short Relation of a Long Journey. (1652)

To travel safely through the world a man must have a falcon's eye, an ass's eares, an ape's face, a merchant's words, a camell's back, a hog's mouth, and a hart's legs.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 296. (1678)

A traveller should have a hog's nose, deer's legs, and an ass's back.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1737.

These are but a few of the many variations of this proverb.

1

He that would travel much, should eat little.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1755.

Travelling is one way of lengthening life, at least in appearance.

FRANKLIN, Letter to Mary Stevenson, 14 Sept., 1767.

2

A Gentleman ought to travel abroad, but dwell at home.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 127. (1732)

A lame Traveller should get out betimes.

The Fool wanders, the wise Man travels.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4540.

Travellers should correct the Vice of one Country, by the Virtue of another.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5273.

3

I think it not fit that every man should travel. It makes a wise man better, and a fool worse.

OWEN FELTHAM, Resolves (1904), p. 240.

(1623) FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5272. (1732)

A man who leaves home to mend himself and others is a philosopher; but he who goes from country to country, guided by the blind impulse of curiosity, is only a vagabond.

GOLDSMITH, The Citizen of the World. Letter 7. (1760)

4

Never any weary traveller complained that he came too soon to his journey's end.

THOMAS FULLER, Good Thoughts in Bad Times, p. 24. (1645)

5

Know most of the rooms of thy native country before thou goest over the threshold thereof. . . . Not like those English, that can give a better account of Fountain-bleau then Hampton-Court.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy State: Of Traveling. Maxim 4. (1642)

6

I should like to spend the whole of my life in travelling abroad, if I could anywhere borrow another life to spend afterwards at home.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Table-Talk: On Going a Journey. (1824)

7

The sure traveller,
Though he alight sometimes, still goeth on.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 57. (a. 1633)

8

He that goeth far hath many encounters.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 610. (1640)

9

Tell me, O Muse, of the man of many devices, who wandered full many ways after he had sacked the sacred citadel of Troy. Many were the men whose cities he saw and whose manners he learned. (πολλῶν δ' ἀνθρώπων ἴδεν ὄσπερ καὶ νόον ἔγνων.)

HOMER, The Odyssey. Bk. i, l. 1. (c. 850 B.C.)
Sing, Muse, for me the man who on Troy's fall
Saw the wide world, its ways and cities all.
(Dic mihi, Musa, virum, captae post tempora Troiae | qui mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 141. (c. 20 B.C.)

Horace is ridiculing mediocre versifiers who attempt grandiose themes, "giving smoke after flame" (fumum ex fulgore).

Ulysses, that tamer of Troy, who looked with discerning eyes upon the cities and manners of many men. (Multorum providus urbes et mores hominum inspexit.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. ii, l. 19. (20 B.C.)
He delighted to wander in unknown lands, to see strange rivers, his eagerness making light of toil. (Ignotis errare locis, ignota videre | flumina gaudebat, studio minuente laborem.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. iv, l. 294. (c. A.D. 7)
He had wisely seen the World at home and abroad.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, A Letter to a Friend. Sec. 24. (1672)

I have been a wanderer among distant fields, I have sailed down mighty rivers.

SHELLEY, The Revolt of Islam: Preface. (1818)
For always roaming with a hungry heart,
Much have I seen and known.

TENNYSON, Ulysses, l. 12. (1842)

10

What exile from his country ever escaped from himself as well? (Patriae quis exsul se quoque fugit?)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. ii, ode 16, l. 19. (c. 23 B.C.)
Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 38.

They change their clime, but not their mind, who rush across the sea. (Caelum, non animum, mutant, qui trans mare currunt.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 11, l. 27. (20 B.C.)
Each blames the place he lives in; but the mind is most at fault, which ne'er leaves self behind (Stultus uterque locum immeritum causatur inique: | in culpa est animus, qui se non effugit umquam.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 14, l. 12. (20 B.C.)
It serves you right! You travelled with yourself. (Non immerito hoc tibi evenit; tecum enim peregrinabaris.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. civ, sec. 7. (c. A.D. 64) Quoting Socrates' reply to a man who complained he had received no benefit from his travels. Seneca continues, "What profit is there in crossing the sea and in going from one city to another? If you would escape your troubles, you need not another place but another personality." MONTAIGNE, i, 38, also quotes Socrates' jibe.

We carry our fetters with us. (Nous emportons nos fers quand et nous.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 38. (1580) Montaigne is commenting on the verses of PER-SIUS, sat. v, l. 159, "Nam et luctata canis nodum abripit, at tamen illi, | cum fugit, a collo trahitur pars longa catenae" (Even a dog may break his chain, yet as he runs away a long piece of it will be trailing from his neck).

Caelum non animum. Travellers change climates, not conditions.

9 We travel sea and soil; we pry, we prowl.

We progress, and we prog from pole to pole.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblems. Bk. ii, emb. 2. (1635)

10 Everywhere is nowhere. When a person spends all his time in foreign travel, he ends by having many acquaintances, but no friends. (Nusquam est, qui ubique est.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. ii, sec. 2. (c. A. D. 64) Travelling cannot give judgment or shake off our errors. (Non iudicium dedit, non discussit errorem.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. civ, sec. 13.

11 Travel and change of place impart new vigor to the mind. (Vectatio iterque et mutata regio vigorem dabunt.)

SENECA, De Tranquillitate Animi. Ch. 17, sec. 8. (c. A. D. 60)

The benefits of travel are many: the freshness it brings to the heart, the delight of beholding new cities, the meeting of unknown friends, the learning of high manners.

SADI, The Gulistan. Pt. iii, No. 28. (c. 1250)

Travaille, in the younger Sort, is a Part of Education; in the Elder, a Part of Experience. He that travaileth into a Country, before he hath some Entrance into the Language, goeth to Schoole, and not to travaille.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Travel. (1612)

12 Travellers must be content.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, ii, 4, 18. (1600)

13 For my part, I travel not to go anywhere, but to go. I travel for travel's sake.

R. L. STEVENSON, Travels With a Donkey. (1879) The French say, "On ne va jamais si loin que lorsqu'on ne sait pas où l'on va" (One never goes so far as when one doesn't know where one is going).

<sup>1</sup> A man may know the world without leaving his own home. From his windows he can see the supreme Heaven, and the farther he goes afield the less likely he is to find it.

Sec. 47. (c. 550 B. C.) Old, tr.

Men go abroad to admire the heights of the mountains . . . and yet pass themselves by.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Confessions. Bk. x, ch. 8. (c. A. D. 397)

What canst thou see elsewhere which thou seest not here? Behold the heavens and the earth, and all the elements; for of these are all things made. (Quid potes alibi videre, quod hic non vides? Ecce caelum et terra et omnia elementa: nam ex istis omnia sunt facta.)

THOMAS À KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Bk. i, ch. 20, sec. 7. (c. 1420)

See one promontory, one mountain, one sea, and see all.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy.

Pt. i, sec. ii, mem. 4, subs. 7. (1621) Given as a quotation from Socrates.

We that acquaint ourselves with ev'ry zone,
And pass both tropics, and behold each pole,
When we come home are to ourselves unknown,
And unacquainted still with our own soul.

SIR JOHN DAVIES, The Vanity of Human Learning. St. 25. (c. 1626)

To understand that the sky everywhere is blue, one need not travel around the world. (Um zu begreifen, dass der Himmel überall blau ist, braucht man nicht um die Welt zu reisen.)

GOETHE, Sprüche in Prosa. (1819)

What people travel for is a mystery.

T. B. MACAULAY, Letter to Lady Trevelyan, 21 Aug., 1843.

We should oftener look over the taffarel of our craft, like curious passengers, and not make the voyage like stupid sailors picking oakum. . . .

Direct your eye right inward, and you'll find
A thousand regions in your mind

Yet undiscovered. Travel them, and be

Expert in home-cosmography. . . .

Be a Columbus to whole new continents and worlds within you, opening new channels, not of trade, but of thought. . . . It is not worth while to go round the world to count the cats in Zan-zibar. . . . If you would learn to speak all tongues, . . . if you would travel farther than all travellers, . . . even obey the precept of the old philosopher, and Explore thyself.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Conclusion. (1854)

Thoreau is referring to the "Know thyself" of Thales. See 2066:4.

Why seek Italy,

Who cannot circumnavigate the sea
Of thoughts and things at home?

R. W. EMERSON, The Day's Ration. (c. 1867)

It was Smollett, I believe, who first remarked upon the futility of travel, saying that all countries were the same, containing nothing but men, women, children, and various coloured mountains.

JOHN LODWICK, Running to Paradise, p. 83. (1943)

<sup>2</sup> The man who goes alone can start today, but he who travels with another must wait till that other is ready.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden: Economy. (1854)

Down to Gehenna or up to the Throne,

He travels the fastest who travels alone.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Winners. (1889)

<sup>3</sup> The young fellows of this age profit no more by their going abroad than they do by their going to church.

JOHN VANBRUGH, The Relapse. Act i, sc. 3. (1696)

He travelled here, he travelled there;—

But not the value of a hair

Was head or heart the better.

WORDSWORTH, Peter Bell. Pt. i, st. 10. (1819)

<sup>4</sup> Though he roam to Concan, no dog will turn into a lion.

UNKNOWN, Hitopadesa. (c. 1250) Dubois, tr.

The fool that far is sent

Some wisdom to attain,

Returns an idiot, as he went,

And brings the fool again.

WHITNEY, Choice of Emblems, p. 178. (1586)

I have knowne many travell far, . . . and yet return as arrant knaves, as they went forth: because they carried themselves alwayes along with them.

JOHN WEBSTER, The Dutchesse of Malfy. Act i, sc. 1. (1614)

Who goes a beast to Rome, a beast returns. (Chi bestia va à Roma, bestia retorna.)

TORRIANO, Piazza Universale, p. 240. (1666)

She hath been to London to call a strea a straw, and a waw a wall.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 75. (1678)

If an Ass goes a travelling, he'll not come Home a Horse.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2668 (1732) FITZGERALD, Polonius: Travel, condenses this to, "Never went out ass and came home horse."

Some of our sparks to London town do go,
Fashions to see, and learn the world to know;
Who at return have nought but these to show,
New wig above, and new disease below.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1734.

Those who travel heedlessly from place to place. . . . set out fools, and will certainly return so.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 30 Oct., 1747.

Send a fool to France and he'll come back a fool.

ANDREW HENDERSON, Scottish Proverbs, p. 22.

(1832) See also under FOOL.

Send a donkey to Paris, he'll return no wiser than he went. (Zendt eenen ezel naer Parys. Gy krygt hem weder even wys.)

CHARLES CAHIER, Quelques Six Mille Prov-

erbes, p. 290. (1856) A Flemish proverb. The Swedes say, "Föra swin til Rhin, det blir antå swin" (Lead a pig to the Rhine, it remains a pig); the Germans, "Fliegt eine

Gans über Meer, so kommt eine wieder her"

(If a goose flies across the sea, there comes back a quack-quack). There are many variants.

II—Travel: Travellers Have Leave to Lie

1 Some have sayled . . . as far as China, . . . to fetch the invention of Guns from thence, but we know the Spanish proverb, "Long wayes, long lies."

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains: Artillery. (1605)

The Spanish proverb is, "De luengas vias, luengas mentiras." The Persians say, "Who-so seeth the world telleth many a lie"; the French, "À beau mentir qui vient de loin"; the Germans, "Von fern lügt man gern."

2 Three sortes of men may lye by auctorite, a Phisition, an Olde man, and a Trauayler.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 75. (1578)

There thre sortes be

Of people luyng, whiche may themselfe defende In lesynge, for they haue auctoryte to lye.

The first is pylgrymes that hath great wonders sene

In strange countres, suche may say what they wyll.

ALEXANDER BARCLAY, The Shyp of Polys, ii, 68. (1509)

A traveller may lye with authority.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains (1870), p. 318. (1605)

Old men and far travellers may lie by authority.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains, p. 330. (1605)

CLARKE, p. 316; RAY, p. 120; FULLER, No. 3715.

Travellers, poets, and lyars are three words al of one signification.

RICHARD BRATHWAIT, The English Gentleman (1641), p. 77. (1630)

Soldiers and travellers may lie by authority.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 21. (1659)

If he has been a traveller, he certainly says true; for he may lie by authority.

DRYDEN and LEE, The Duke of Guise. Act iv, sc. 4. (1683)

There is a kind of latitude, they say, given to travellers to exceed the truth.

3 Pilgrymes and palmers . . . hedden leue to lygen.

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers the Plowman. A text, Prologue, l. 46. (c. 1362)

Trauellers . . . haue liberty to vtter what lies they list.

THOMAS DELONEY, The Gentle Craft. Pt. ii, ch. 6. (c. 1598)

A travelled man has leave to lie.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 23. (1721)

4 One must expect to hear lies from a traveller.

SADI, Gulistan. Ch. i. Apologue 32. (c. 1258)

Travaylors wordes are not much trusted.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace: Cephalus and Procris, p. 199. (1575)

So far as my experience goes, travelers generally exaggerate the difficulties of the way.

H. D. THORP, A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers: Tuesday. (1849)

TREACHERY

5 What odious monster shall I call her? An amphisbaena? (τί νιν καλοῦσα δυσφίλης δάκος | τύχοιμ' ἄν; ἀμφίσβαιναν;)

AESCHYLUS, Agamemnon, l. 1232. (458 B.C.)

The amphisbaena was a fabulous snake "moving both ways," backwards and forwards, hence a personification of treachery. Tennyson's "an amphisbaena, each end a sting," reproduced Pliny's description.

The silence of a friend commonly amounts to treachery.

HAZLITT, Characteristics. No. 15. (1823)

6 Thou hast long hands, and usest them under-board.

JOHN FLORIO, Second Frutes, p. 134. (1591)

The receivers [of underhand pensions] will play under-board at the Counsell-table.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy State. Bk. iv, ch. 5, The Wise Statesman. (1642)

You should not think I . . . play under board to deceive you.

WILLIAM ROBERTSON, Phraseologia Generalis, p. 437. (1681) See also ABOVE-BOARD.

7 No tie can oblige the perfidious.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 1064. (1650)

8 More men are guilty of treachery through weakness than through any studied design to betray. (L'on fait plus souvent des trahisons par faiblesse que par un dessein formé de trahir.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 120. (1665) Guile and treachery are merely the result of want of talent. (Les finesses et les trahisons ne viennent que du manque d'habileté.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 126.

The smallest disloyalty to ourselves offends us more than the deepest treachery towards others. On se décrie beaucoup plus auprès de nous par les moindres infidélités qu'on nous fait, que par les plus grandes qu'on fait aux autres.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 360.

9 The smooth speeches of the wicked are full of treachery. (Habent insidias hominis blanditiæ mali.)

PHÆDRUS, Fables. Bk. i, fab. 19, l. 1. (c. 25 B.C.)

10 Scandalized at a little piece of sculduggery.

WALTER SCOTT, Redgauntlet. Ch. 13. (1824)

[They] are up to some scull-duggery.

A. D. RICHARDSON, Beyond the Mississippi, p. 134. (1867)

The Missourians have two words to express the idea of underhand plotting; to wit, "skullduggery" and "chenanigan."

J. R. BARTLETT, Americanisms, p. 397. (1877) Now usually spelled "shenanigan."

11 He is composed and framed of treachery.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, v, 1, 256. (1598)

II—Treachery: Some Examples

<sup>1</sup> It is dissembling falsehood in man to smile and betray, as Judas began his treachery with a kiss. Such are likened to those bottled windy drinks, that laugh in a mans face, and then cut his throat.

THOMAS ADAMS, Sermons (1861).iii,267.(1629)
To laugh in ones face and cut his throat.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 184. (1670)
A woman will . . . laugh in your face and cut your throat.

EDWARD WARD, Female Policy, p. 53. (1716)
How is it [cider], treacherous? . . . It smiles in my face and cuts my throat.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. ii. (1738)

<sup>2</sup> He covers me with his wings, and bites me with his bill.

THOMAS DRAXE, Bibliotheca, p. 97. (1633)

RAY, p. 5; FULLER, No. 1829.

He carries two faces under one hood.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 140. (1639)

<sup>3</sup> How many fair-spoken Flatterers to one's Face, have prov'd Cut-Throats behind one's Back.

DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 291. (1709)

How many treacherous Changelings are there that carry Fire in one Hand, and Water in the other; or can breathe Heat and Cold, Love and Hatred, out of the same Mouth.

OSWALD DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 291. To BLOW HOT AND COLD, see HEAT AND COLD.

<sup>4</sup> To stroke with one Hand, and stab with the other.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.5236.(1732)

To throw the Stone, and hide the Hand.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5246.

With one hand he scratches you, with the other he strikes you. (Altera manu scabit, altera ferit.)

HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 18. (1869)

<sup>5</sup> The rascal takes to flight and leaves me under the knife. (Fugit improbus, ac me | sub cultro linquit.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 9, l. 73. (35 B. C.)

O noble hearts and simple, beware of treacherous blades! (Simplex nobilitas, perfida tela cave!)

<sup>6</sup> He hides mailed soldiers. He conceals a dagger in his sleeve.

WILLIAM SCARBOUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 872-3. (1875)

He has incense in one hand and a spear in the other.

HART, 700 Chinese Proverbs, No. 266. (1937)

<sup>7</sup> Wags its tail and bites. (σαλvouσα δάκνει.)

SOPHOCLES, Fragments. Frag. 902. (c. 425 B. C.)

A variant is, "Many lick before they bite."

<sup>8</sup> What a tragedy it is when you are taken prisoner by those who should defend you! (Quam miserum est, ubi te captant, qui defenderent!)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No.607.(c.43 B. C.)

TREASON

AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, History. Bk. xvi, ch. 8, sec. 4. (C. A. D. 390) The law proverb is "Crimen laesae maiestatis," literally, the crime of injury to majesty. The French say, "Lèse-majesté."

<sup>10</sup> You too, my child? (καὶ σὺ τέκνον;)

JULIUS CAESAR, as Marcus Brutus stabbed him. (44 B. C.) See Suetonius, The Deified Julius.

Ch. 82, sec. 3. Suetonius says that Caesar uttered the words in Greek.

Et tu, Brute! Then fall, Caesar!

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar, iii, 1, 77. (1599)

Caesar had his Brutus; Charles the First his Cromwell; and George the Third ["Treason!" cried the Speaker] may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it.

PATRICK HENRY, Speech in the Virginia Convention, 1765.

Caesar had his Brutus—the cotton has its boll-worm, the summer boarder has his poison ivy, art has its Morgan.

O. HENRY, An Adjustment of Nature. (1906)

<sup>11</sup> Treason hath blister'd heels, dishonest things Have bitter rivers, though delicious springs.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Charles, Duke of Byron. Act i, sc. 1. (1608)

<sup>12</sup> Rebellion must be managed with many swords; treason to his prince's person may be with one knife.

THOMAS FULLER, The Profane State: The Traitor. (1642)

<sup>13</sup> Treason doth neuer prosper, what's the reason?

For if it prosper, none dare call it Treason.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Epigrams: Of Treason Bk. iv, epig. 259. (a. 1612)

Treason is not own'd when 'tis descried;

Successful crimes alone are justified.

JOHN DRYDEN, The Medall, l. 207. (1682)

Successful villainy is called virtue. (Prosperum et felix scelus virtus vocatur.)

ALFRED HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 343. (1869) Quoting Seneca. "Success consecrates the foulest crimes," "A thief passes for a gentleman when stealing has made him rich."

Because they sukseeded, wasn't it glory? But if they hadn't, I spose it would have been treeson.

CHARLES HENRY SMITH (BILL ARP), Bill Arp's Peace Papers. (1872) Referring to the American Revolution.

The conquerors are kings; the defeated are bandits.

HART, 700 Chinese Proverbs, No. 616. (1937)

<sup>1</sup>
The seeds of Treason choake up as they spring.
He Acts the Crima, that gives it Cherishing.

ROBERT HERRICK, Hesperides: Treason. (1648)

The man who pauses on the paths of treason,
Halts on a quicksand; the first step engulfs him.

AARON HILL, Henry V. Act i, sc. 1. (a. 1750)

<sup>2</sup>
We have four columns advancing upon Madrid. The fifth column [sympathizers within the city] will rise at the proper time.

GENERAL EMILIO MOLA, Radio Address, after the fall of Toledo, in the Spanish Civil war. The phrase "fifth column" soon became of widespread use in describing boring from within.

Fifth column, that's what we're up against.

AGATHA CHRISTIE, N or M?, p. 180. (1941)

<sup>3</sup>
Treason is but trusted like the fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV, v, 2, 9. (1597)

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not hoop at them.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V, ii, 2, 105. (1599)

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear, v, 3, 122. (1605)

Treason seldom dwells with courage.

WALTER SCOTT, The Talsman. Ch. 1. (1825)

<sup>4</sup>
The Lorde Hungerforde was . . . behedede for hye treasoune.

JOHN WARKWORTH, Chronicle (Camden), p. 5. (1473) O.E.D. defines high treason as "Violation by a subject of his allegiance to his sovereign or to the state."

How! strike a Justice of Peace! 'Tis petty treason.

PHILIP MASSINGER, A New Way to Pay Old Debts. Act iii, sc. 2. (1625)

Petit Treason is a Treason of a lower degree; as if a Servant kill his Master, a Wife her Husband. [In other words, some one to whom the offender owes allegiance.]

UNKNOWN, Termes de la Ley, p. 450. (1708)

II—Treason: To Love the Treason, but Hate the Traitor

<sup>5</sup>
Though the treachery may please, the traitor is detested. (Aunque la traición aplace, el traidor se aborrece.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 39. (1605)

The version of the Comendador Nunez is, "Traición aplace, mas no el que la hace."

Who made good to them our Spanish proverb, that the treason pleases, but the traitors are odious.

PETER MOTTEUX, tr., Don Quixote, i, 39. (1712)

<sup>6</sup>
Princes in this case
Do hate the traitor though they love the treason.

SAMUEL DANIEL, Cleopatra. Act iv, sc.1. (1594)
The principle is old but true as fate,
Kings may love treason but the traitor hate.

THOMAS DEKKER, The Honest Whore. Pt. i, act iv, sc. 4. (1604)

I'm like that great one,
Who, making politic use of a great villain,
He likes the treason well, but hates the traitor.

THOMAS MIDDLETON, Women Beware Women. Act ii, sc. 2. (c. 1622)

<sup>7</sup>
O, Sir, I love the fruit that treason brings,
But those that are the traitors, them I hate.

ROBERT GREENE, Selimus, l. 2122. (1594)

For while the treason I detest,
The traitor still I love.

JOHN HOOLE, tr., Melastatio, i, 5. (1767)

<sup>8</sup>
He loved treachery but hated a traitor.
(φιλεῖν μὲν προδοσίαν, προδότην δὲ μισεῖν.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Romulus. Ch. 17, sec. 3. (c. A.D. 110) Of Julius Caesar. The Latin is, "Proditionem amo, sed proditorem non laudo" (I love the treason, but I do not praise the traitor).

Hate then the traitor, but yet love the treason.
DRYDEN AND LEE, The Duke of Guise. Act iii, sc. 1. (1683)

We love the treason, but we hate the traitor.

L'ESTRANGE, tr., Aesop. Fab. 194. (1692)

<sup>9</sup>
Traitors are hated even by those whom they prefer. (Proditores etiam iis quos anteponunt invisi sunt.)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. i, sec. 58. (c. A.D. 116)

They loue no traytors, that doe traytors vse.

CHRISTOPHER BROOKE, The Ghost of Richard Third (Grosart), p. 109. (1614)

LOVE SINNER BUT HATE SIN, see under SIN.

III—Treason: The Traitor

<sup>10</sup>
He looks for his Quislings among the men who feel that their remarkable qualities have been unfairly neglected.

FRANCIS BEEADING, Eleven Were Brave, p. 28.

(1941) Vidkun Quisling, the name of the Norwegian whom Hitler put in control of the country after its capture by the Germans, and who was executed by his countrymen, 24 Oct. 1945. "Quisling" soon passed into the language as a synonym for traitor.

<sup>11</sup>
It is bet for me
For to be deed in wyfly honestee
Than be a traitour living in my shame.

CHAUCER, The Legend of Hypermnestra, l. 139.
O servant traitour, false hoonly hewe,
Lyk to the naddre in bosom aly untrew.

CHAUCER, Marchantes Tale, l. 541. (c. 1388)

<sup>1</sup> A loyal heart may be landed under Traitors' Bridge. This is a bridge under which is an entrance into the Tower [of London].

THOMAS FULLER, Worthies, ii, 347. (1662)

<sup>2</sup> It is evil company of a traitor.

JEAN D'ARRAS, comp., Melusine. (c. 1500)

Another form is, "A traitor is ill company." Fellowship in treason is a bad ground of confidence.

EDMUND BURKE, Remarks on the Policy of the Allies. (1793)

<sup>3</sup> A traitor never sees his danger until his ruin is at hand.

METASTATIO, Temistocle. Act iii. (1735)

<sup>4</sup> Are there traitors at the table that the loaf is turned the wrong side upwards?

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 82. (1678)

The signal . . . was when one of his pretended friends, who betrayed him [Wallace, in 1305], should turn a loaf . . . with its bottom or flat side uppermost.

SCOTT, Tales of a Grandfather. Ch. 7. (1827)

<sup>5</sup> Traitor's word never yet hurt honest cause.

WALTER SCOTT, Rob Roy. Ch. 35. (1818)

<sup>6</sup> Some guard these traitors to the block of death,

Treason's true bed and yielder up of breath.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV, iv, 2, 122. (1598)

<sup>7</sup> A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI, v, 1, 191. (1590)

An arrant traitor as any in the universal world

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V, iv, 8, 10. (1599)

And, from the extremest upward of thy head To the descent and dust below thy foot,

A most toad-spotted traitor.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear, v, 3, 136. (1605)

Son: What is a traitor?

Lady Macduff: Why, one that swears and lies.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth, iv, 2, 46. (1606)

A kind of puppy To the old dam, treason.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII, i, 1, 175. (1612)

TREASURE

<sup>8</sup> The more treasures the more care.

RABBI HILLEL, Mishnah: Pirke Aboth, ii, 8. (c. 50 B. C.) Oesterley, tr.

LUCIAN, as quoted by ZENOBIUS, ii, i. ERASMUS, Adagia, i, ix, 30, has "Thesaurus car-bones erant."

<sup>10</sup> Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal. (θησαυρίσετε δὲ ὑμῖν θησαυροὺς ἐν οὐρανῷ.)

New Testament: Matthew, vi, 20. (c. A. D. 65)

The Vulgate is, "Thesaurizate autem vobis thesauros in caelo."

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt.

Book of Common Prayer: The Communion. (1548)

We should not hoord up for our selves any treasure on earth.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 177. (1574) Pettie, tr.

First let me lay up for myself treasure in heaven, and then shall I enjoy true pleasure on earth.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 270. (1576)

<sup>11</sup> Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. (ὅπου γὰρ ἐστὶν ὁ θησαυρός σου, ἐκεῖ ἐστὶν ἡ καρδία σου.)

New Testament: Matthew, vi, 21. (c. A. D. 65)

The Vulgate is, "Ubi enim est thesaurus tuus, ibi est et cor tuum."

Where a mans treasure is there is his hart.

JOHN PAYNE, Royall Exchange, p. 44 (1597)

Their heart was not in it [their work], and only where the heart is can the treasure be found.

As wroth, that men upon his right should rove. Or theevish hands usurp his Treasur-trove.

JOSHUA SYLVESTER, tr., Du Bartas, i, v, 737

(1591) Treasure found, trésor trouvé, the-saurus inventus. Hidden treasure.

TREATY

<sup>13</sup> In long treaty lieth great falsehood.

JEAN D'ARRAS, comp., Melusine. Ch.20. (c.1500)

No treaty is anything but a monument to the bad faith of kings. (Nul traité qui ne soit comme un monument de la mauvaise foi des souverains.)

VAUVENARGUES, Réflexions. No. 573. (1746)

It is a vain attempt

To bind th' ambitious and unjust by treaties.

JAMES THOMSON, Coriolanus. (1749)

Treaties at best are but complied with so long as interest requires their fulfilment.

WASHINGTON IRVING, Knickerbocker's History of New York. (1809)

All treaties between great states cease to be binding when they come into conflict with the struggle for existence.

OTTO VON BISMARCK, Speech, before the Reichstag. (c. 1870)

TREE

<sup>14</sup> An olde tree transposed shall finde small auauntage.

ALEXANDER BARCLAY, The Mirror of Good Manners (Spens. Soc.), p. 67. (1570)

Remove an old tree, and it will dye.

Remove an old tree, and it will wither to death

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 22. (1670)

KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 284, with the comment, "Spoken by a man who is loth to leave a place in his advanc'd years, in which he had long lived."

Remove an old Tree, and you'll kill it.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.4016. (1732)
You can't transplant an old tree.

W. M. PRAED, The Old Tory. (1831) The French say "Arbre souvent remué fait à peine bon fruit" (A tree often removed will hardly bear good fruit); the Germans, "Alte Bäume soll man nicht verpflanzen" (Old trees must not be transplanted).

1 Not lettynge for fere of any deth, though it be to go to the dry tre.

LORD BERNERS, Huon of Burdeux, xviii, 49. (a. 1533) The gallows.

It was thy luck to cheat the fatal tree.

THOMAS BROWN, A Satire on Quacks. (a.1704)
In the middle . . . arose the fatal tree.

SCOTT, The Heart of Midlothian. Ch. 4. (1818)

2 The tree will wither long before it fall.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iii, st. 32. (1812)

3 O leave this barren spot to me!

Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree.

CAMPBELL, The Beech-Tree's Petition. (1800)
Woodman, spare that tree!

Touch not a single bough!

In youth it sheltered me,

And I'll protect it now.

GEORGE POPE MORRIS, The Oak. First printed in The New York Mirror, N.Y., 7 Jan., 1837.

4 If you love the boll, you cannot hate the braunches.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 285. (1639)

He that loves the tree, loves the branch.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 856. (1640) See also FATHER AND SON.

king of Prussia. (Pour le roi de Prusse.)

TOLSTOY, War and Peace. Vol. ii, pt. ii, ch. 7.
(1865) Dole, tr., who notes that "pour le roi de Prusse" is an untranslatable joke, meaning for mere trifles, dating perhaps from the time when, to French minds, the king of Prussia was a trifle. At the siege of Beirut (July, 1941), a French captain made the same remark to a newspaper correspondent, "Nous nous battons pour le roi de Prusse." See Time, 28 July, 1941, p. 16.

6 Think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the

(1728) The first line quoted by NGAIIO
MARSH, Death in Ecstasy, p. 139. (1940)

A wise man scorneth nothing, be it never so small or homely. . . .

Planets govern not the soul, nor guide the destinies of man,

But trifles, lighter than straws, are levers in the building up of character.

M. F. TUPPER, Proverbial Philosophy: Of Indirect Influences. (1852)

TRIPE

7 It's the tripe that carry the feet, not the feet
the tripe.

Don't cross the bridge till you come to it,

Is a proverb old, and of excellent wit.

LONGFELLOW, The Golden Legend. Pt. vi. (1851) See under BRIDGE.

Wait till you come to the river before pulling off your shoes.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. xl. (1938)

A Chinese proverb.

Never jump your fences till you meet them.

NGAIO MARSH, Death of a Peer, p. 48. (1940)

13 Sorrows are like thunderclouds—in the distance they look black, over our heads scarcely gray. (Die Leiden sind wie die Gewitterwolken; in der Ferne sehen sie schwarz aus, über uns kaum grau.)

JEAN PAUL RICHTER, Hesperus. Ch. 14. (1792)

If pleasures are the greatest in anticipation, just remember that this is also true of troubles.

ELBERT HUBBARD, Epigrams. (1911)

Trouble has a trick of coming butt end first;

Viewed approaching, then you've seen it at its worst.

E. L. SABIN, Trouble's Strong Front. (c. 1915)

14 Though life cannot reach a hundred years, men cherish the troubles of a thousand. (Jên shêng pu man pai, ch'ang 'huai ch'ien sui yu.)

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 923. (1875)

Prepare for trouble and you will escape it. (Yu pei wu 'huan.)

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 2051.

<sup>1</sup>
How much pain have cost us the things which have never happened.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to Charles Clay. (1817)

Some of your griefs you have cured,
And the sharpest you still have survived;
But what torments of pain you endured
From evils that never arrived!

EMERSON, The Conduct of Life: Considerations by the Way. (1860) Quoted as from "an old French verse."

I have had many troubles in my life, but the worst of them never came.

JAMES A. GARFIELD, Remark in Conversation. (c. 1875)

"Our worst misfortunes are those which never befall us." It is Emerson who says, "What torments of pain you endured From griefs that never arrived."

E. P. HOOD, World of Proverbs, p. 131. (1885)
Let us be of good cheer, however, remembering that the misfortunes hardest to bear are those which never come

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, Democracy and Other Addresses. (1887)

Lord Beaconsfield once said that the worst evil one has to endure is the anticipation of the calamities that do not happen.

A. C. BENSON, From a College Window, p. 35. (1907)

<sup>2</sup>
We suffer more in imagination than in reality. (Saepius opinione quam re laboramus.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xiii, sec. 4. (c. A. D. 64)

Many things seem greater by imagination than be effect. (Plusieurs choses nous semblent plus grandes par imagination que par effect.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 6. (1580)

<sup>3</sup>
What avails it to run out to meet your troubles? (Quid iuvat dolori suo occurrere?)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xiii, sec. 10. (c. A. D. 64)

What madness to anticipate one's troubles. He suffers more than is necessary who suffers before it is necessary. (Quae ista dementia est malum suum antecedere? . . . Plus dolet quam necesse est, qui ante dolet quam necesse est.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xcvi, sec. 8.

Quoted by MONTAIGNE, iii, 12, who adds, "Qui craint de souffrir, il souffre desja de ce qu'il craint" (He who fears to suffer, suffers already because he fears).

You are come to meet your trouble.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, i, 1, 96. (1598)

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?

MILTON, Comus, l. 362. (1634)

I can't see the use of . . . trying to meet troubles halfway.

HUTCHESON, Crown and Anchor. Ch. 16. (1896)
It's bad form to go half-way to meet troubles which are not coming to your house.

ETHEL WHITE, The Wheel Spins. Ch. 22. (1936)

The Irish have a saying, "Never go down a lane to meet trouble. It comes up the highroad on horseback."

HELEN MILLER, Sheridan Road, p. 157. (1942)

UNKNOWN, Political, Religious and Love Poems (E.E.T.S.), p. 69. (c. 1460)

I heard ofttimes the curate preach that "He that seeks the danger perisheth therein."

THOMAS SHELTON, tr., Don Quixote. Pt. i, bk. iii, ch. 6. (1612)

He that seeks trouble never misses.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 418. (1640)

He that seeks trouble, it were a pity he should miss it.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 131. (1721)
He that seeketh Trouble, never misseth of it.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2291. (1732)

You are always looking for trouble, which is the best way I know of to find it.

LEE THAYER, Murder Is Out, p. 67. (1942)

TROWEL

<sup>5</sup>
That was laid on with a trowel.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It, i, 2, 112. (1600)
Flattery of the Roman emperors . . . so gross that it seems . . . daubed with a trowel.

THOMAS FULLER, A Pisgah-Sight of Palestine. Bk. ii, ch. 6. (1650)

Paints, d'ye say? Why, she lays it on with a trowel.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, The Double-Dealer. Act iii, sc. 10. (1693)

You lay on your Butter, as with a Trowel.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5930. (1732)

They also laid on praise with a trowel.

UNKNOWN, New Foundling Hospital for Wit, iii, 81. (1784)

The old hand laying the court butter on his back with a trowel.

CHARLES READE, The Cloister and the Hearth. Ch. 50. (1860)

Every one likes flattery; and when you come to Royalty you should lay it on with a trowel.

G. W. E. RUSSELL, Collections and Recollections. Ch. 23. (1898) Quoted as a remark of Disraeli to Matthew Arnold.

It has always been a good rule to lay it on with a trowel.

A. E. W. MASON, The House of the Arrow. Ch. 3. (1924)

He couldn't have laid his admiration on thicker with a trowel.

VAN WYCK MASON, The Bucharest Ballerina Murders, p. 65. (1940)

After that I laid it on, as they used to say in those days, with a shovel.

H. L. MENCKEN, Newspaper Days, p. 273. (1941)

TROY

<sup>1</sup> Troy was not took in a Day.
THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5278. (1732)

<sup>2</sup> There will be a day when sacred Ilium shall be no more. (ἔσεται ἡμῶν ὅτ' ἂν ποτ' ὀλώλῃ "Ἴλιος ἱρῆ.)
HOMER, Iliad. Bk. iv, l. 164; bk. vi, l. 448. (c. 850 B.C.)

Troy fell because Cassandra was not believed. (Cassandrae quia non creditam ruit Ilium.)

PHAEDRUS, Fables. Bk. iii, fab. 10.1.4. (c.25 B.C.)
Lofty Troy once was. (Altaque Troia fuit.)

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. ii, eleg. viii, l. 10. (c. 24 B.C.)

Troy falls from her lofty height. (Ruit alto a culmine Troia.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. ii, l. 290. (19 B.C.)

We Trojans are not, Ilium is not. (Fuimus Troes, fuit Ilium.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. ii, l. 325. (19 B.C.) Troy was: that is, Troy, though now destroyed, was once a great and powerful city. A proverb, cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, ix, 50. It applies to persons, or families, or countries, formerly in repute, but fallen into decay. Dr. John Caius (1510-1573), founder of Gonville Hall, at the University of Cambridge, had "Fui Caius" engraved on his Tombstone.

Now are empty fields where Troy was. (Iam seges est ubi Troia fuit.)

OVID, Heroides. Epis. i, l. 53. (c. 10 B.C.)

As they went out of Barcelona, Don Quixote beheld the place where he had his fall, and said, "Hic Troia fuit"; here . . . my fortune fell, never to rise again.

THOMAS SHIELTON, tr., Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 66. (1620)

<sup>3</sup> Forward! charge like Trojans!

J. R. PLANCHÉ, Extravaganzas, iii, 143. (1846)
He went on lying like a Trojan.

DICKENS, The Holly Tree. Branch 2. (1855)

LIVIVS ANDRONICUS. (c. 240 B.C.) The ascription is made by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, 1, 28. After ten years' war, with their city on the point of being taken, the Trojans began to think of restoring Helen.

So that we may not be like the Athenians, who never consulted except after the event done. (Afin que ne semblons les Atheniens, qui ne consultoient jamais sinon après le cas fait.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. ii, ch. 24. (1545)

The Trojans repented too late when their town was spoiled.

JOHN LILLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 37. (1579)

Had doting Priam checked his son's desire, Troy had been bright with fame and not with fire.

SHAKESPEARE, Rape of Lucrece, l. 1490. (1594)

SENECA, Agamemnon, l. 795. (c. A. D. 60) Any city will be overthrown by an adulterous woman.

And, like Helen, fired another Troy.

DRYDEN, Alexander's Feast, l. 150. (a. 1700)

<sup>6</sup> Through such snares and craft of forsworn Sinon the story won belief, and we were ensnared by wiles and forced tears.

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. ii, l. 195. (19 B.C.) It was Sinon who persuaded the Trojans to haul the wooden horse inside the walls.

Like a Sinon, take another Troy.

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI, iii, 2, 190. (1591)
Our danger is the danger of Troy—the wooden horse.

AGATHA CHRISTIE, N or M?, p. 10. (1941)

<sup>7</sup> I am on the side of the Trojans. They fought for a woman.

OSCAR WILDE, Dorian Gray. Ch. 17. (1891)

TRUE

<sup>8</sup> What is true . . . is most congenial to man's nature. (Quod verum . . . esse naturae hominis aptissimum.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 4, sec. 13. (c. 45 B.C.) "Quod verum tutum" (What is true is safe), is another Latin proverb, and to Seneca is attributed "Quod verum est, meum est" (What is true is mine). It was Boileau, however, who pointed out, "Le vrai peut quelquefois n'être pas vraisemblable" (The true may sometimes be incredible.)

<sup>9</sup> The proverb is, who that is trewe, Him schal his while nevere rewe.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. vii, l. 1961. (c. 1390) While: time.

To thine own self be true, And it must follow, as the night the day, Thou canst not then be false to any man.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, i, 3, 78. (1600)

Be so true to thy Selfe, as thou be not false to Others.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Wisdome for a Mans Selfe. (1612)

The first great work, a task performed by few, Is, that yourself may to yourself be true.

WENTWORTH DILLON, Essay on Translated Verse, l. 71. (1680)

Don't be "consistent," but be simply true.

O. W. HOLMES, The Professor at the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 2. (1860)

Thou must be true thyself, If thou the truth wouldst teach.

HORATIUS BONAR, Be True. (c. 1868)

He that feeds men serveth few; He serves all who dares be true.

R. W. EMERSON, The Celestial Love. (1870)

<sup>10</sup> If it be not true here's my elbow.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p.17. (1659)

<sup>1</sup> What is true by lamplight is not always true by sunlight. (Ce qui est vrai à la lampe n'est pas toujours vrai au soleil.)

JOSEPH JOUBERT, Pensées. No. 152. (1810)

<sup>2</sup> It is even easier to be mistaken about the true than the beautiful. (Il est encore plus facile de se tromper sur le vrai que sur le beau.)

JOUBERT, Pensées. No. 164. (1810)

If I had a device, it would be the True, the True only, leaving the Beautiful and the Good to settle matters afterwards as best they could.

SAINTE-BEUVE, Letter to Duruy, 9 Dec., 1865.

Sainte-Beuve is commenting on the phrase, "The true, the good and the beautiful" (German, "Das Wahre, das Gute, das Schöne"; the French, "Le vrai, le bon, le beau"), whose author is not known.

Love the true because it is also the beautiful.

II—Trust: The Trusts

Report of Committee, N.Y. State Senate, after the investigation of the Standard Oil Company, in 1888. The word "trust" as referring to a combination of capital had been introduced into the language by Samuel C. T. Dodd in 1882, while acting as attorney for John C. Rockefeller. Both the Republican and Democratic platforms of 1888 seized what promised to be a popular issue and denounced the "trusts."

<sup>5</sup> The mother of trusts.

WOODROW WILSON, in 1898, referring to New Jersey, because her laws authorized the creation of "holding corporations." Jesse Hardesty used the phrase as the title of a book about railroad rebates, and Henry O. Havemeyer, while testifying before the Industrial Commission in 1899, applied it to the customs tariff.

COMMISSARY GENERAL WESTON, when the first American general staff was appointed. See HUGH S. JOHNSON, Syndicated Article, 12 July, 1935.

At a Saturday press conference, Mr. Roosevelt casually remarked that the Columbia professors were his guests. "The brains trust," Kieran remarked.

New York Times, 29 June, 1933. James M. Kieran was a reporter for the Times, and the conversation took place at Hyde Park, the Roosevelt home, in August, 1932, during Mr. Roosevelt's first Presidential campaign. The "Columbia professors" were a group whom Mr. Roosevelt had been consulting about his campaign speeches. This was the launching of the famous phrase, which the newspapers promptly seized upon and soon modified to "brain trust." Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner, in an article in the Saturday Evening Post, 29 Oct., 1938, p. 5, We Shall Make America Over, assert that the phrase was coined by Roosevelt's secretary, Louis McHenry Howe, early in the campaign of 1932, and picked up by Kieran.

You ought to be head of the Brain Trust.

PETER CHEYNEY, Farewell to the Admiral, p. 75. (1943)

TRUTH

<sup>7</sup> Simple are the words of truth. (ἀπλὰ γὰρ ἐστὶ τῆς ἀληθείας ἔκκ.)

AESCHYLUS, Award of the Arms. Frag. 92. Smyth. (c. 458 B.C.) STORAEUS, iii, 11, 4.

Plain and unvarnished are the words of truth. (ἀπλοὺς ὁ μῦθος τῆς ἀληθείας ἐκκ.)

EURIPIDES, Phoenissae. l. 469. (c. 420 B.C.)

Speech that deals with truth should be unadorned and plain. (Quae veritate operam dat oratio, inconposita esse debet et simplex.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xl, sec. 4. (c. 64 A. D.) The language of truth is simple. (Veritatis simplex oratio est.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. xlix, sec. 12. Seneca is condensing Euripides into a proverb cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, iii, 88, and other compilers. Matthew of Boerhave changed this to "Simplex sigillum veri" (Simple is the seal of truth).

The language of truth is unadorned and always simple. (Veritatis absolutus sermo ac semper est simplex.)

God has a seal, and his seal is truth.

Midrash: Deuteronomy Rabbah, 1. (c. 625)

It is pointed out in Genesis R., lxi, 2, that the word for truth, "Amt," consists of the first, middle, and final letters of the Hebrew alphabet.

Wise men ought to print in their heart the saying of Pithagoras, who being demaunded when men did any thing which might make them like to God: answered when they tell the trueth.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. i, p. 96. (1574) Pettie, tr. Reminiscent of the Latin proverb, "Veritas, a quocunque dicitur, a Deo est" (Truth, by whomsoever spoken, is from God).

Truth is God's daughter.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 138. (1678)

FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5301. (1732) From the Spanish, "La verdad es hija de Dios."

Truth is the porter of God.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 522. (1938) An Arabic proverb.

4

Both [Plato and truth] are dear to us, but it is a sacred duty to put truth first. (ἀμφοῖν γὰρ ὄντοι φιλοῖν ὅσιον προτιμᾶν τὴν ἀλήθειαν.)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. i, ch. 6, sec. 1. The Latin is, "Amicus Plato, sed magis amica veritas" (Plato is a friend, but a greater friend is truth). It is quoted by CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 51.

No pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of Truth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Truth. (1612)

5

Truth will return to them that practise it. (Veritas ad eos, qui operantur illam. revertetur.)

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxvii, 10. (c. 190 B. C.)

I tell the honest truth in my paper, and I leave the consequences to God.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT, SR., in The New York Herald, 10 May, 1836

6

Truth breeds hatred. (ἡ ἀλήθεια εἶναι μαλλώτρα.)

BIAS, Maxim. (c. 600 B. C.) TERENCE, Andria, l. 68, gives the Latin form, "Veritas odium parit," which is put into the mouth of Bias by AUSONIUS, Ludus Septem Sapientum Sec. 8, l. 3. Another Latin form is, "E veritate odium" (From truth, hatred).

Truth getteth hatred.

GEORGE PETTIE, Petite Pallace, p. 231. (1576)

Truth, as the proverb runs, begets hatred often times in the minds of those to whom it is spoken.

JAMES HOWELL, The Parley of Beasts, p. 51. (1660) The French say, "Vrai dire fait ennemis."

Truth is often attended with danger. (Pericula veritati saepe contigua.)

AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, History. Bk. xxvi, sec. 1. (c. A. D. 330)

It is a common saying, Veritas odium parit, Truth purchaseth hatred.

THOMAS WILSON, Usurye (1925), p. 188. (1572)

I never saw any good that came of telling truth.

DRYDEN, Amphitryon. Act iii, sc. 1. (1690)

Truth is a narrow lane all full of quags, Leading to broken heads, abuse, and rags.

Every man seeks for truth, but God only knows who has found it.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 Sept., 1747.

Differing judgements serve but to declare

That Truth lies somewhere, if we knew but where.

WILLIAM COWPER, Hope, l. 423. (1781)

<sup>7</sup> Veracity does not consist in saying, but in the intention of communicating truth.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Biographia Literaria. Ch. 9. (1817)

I have known many, especially women, love the good for the good's sake; but very few indeed, and scarcely one woman, love the truth for the truth's sake.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Table-Talk, 6 Aug., 1831.

<sup>8</sup> Truth ever honorably declares herself. (Res se vera quidem semper declarat honeste.)

COLUMBANUS, Carmen Monostichon, l. 15. (c. A. D. 600)

<sup>9</sup> He who hears the truth in the morning may die in the evening without regret.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. iv, ch. 8. (c. 500 B. C.)

He who knows the truth is not equal to him who loves it, and he who loves it is not equal to him who delights in it.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. vi, ch. 18. (c. 500 B. C.)

Legge, tr.

It is man that makes truth great, not truth that makes man great.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. xv, ch. 28. (c. 500 B. C.)

<sup>10</sup> Truth is unwelcome, however divine,

And unless you adorn it, a nausea follows.

WILLIAM COWPER, The Flattening Mill. (1781)

By soothsaying it is quite possible to make a good living in the world, but not by truth-saying.

G. C. LICHTENBERG, Reflections. (1799)

The Turks say, "He who would speak truth must first have one foot in the stirrup"; the Jugoslavs, "Speak the truth and run."

JEREMY TAYLOR, The Worthy Communicant. Pt. i, sec. 2. (1660)

<sup>16</sup> It takes two to speak the truth—one to speak, and another to hear.

H. D. THOREAU, A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers: Wednesday. (1849)

<sup>17</sup> Truth is that which a man troweth.

J. H. TOOKE, The Diversions of Purley. (1786)

<sup>18</sup> When in doubt, tell the truth.

MARK TWAIN, Notebook, 2 Feb., 1894.

<sup>19</sup> The truth is always respectable.

MARK TWAIN, Tom Sawyer. Ch. 23. (1876)

Truth is the most valuable thing we have. Let us economize it.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar. (1893)

Truth is a rare virtue; be sparing in its use.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar. Used also as a chapter heading in Following the Equator. (1897)

<sup>20</sup> Few people have enough character to endure the truth, and to speak it. (Peu de gens ont assez de fonds pour souffrir la vérité, et pour la dire.)

VAUVENARGUES, Réflexions. No. 235. (1746)

Truth, if there is any truth, needs no martyrs.

SHAW, Androcles and the Lion. Act i. (1912)

<sup>1</sup> It is one thing to wish to have truth on our side, and another to wish sincerely to be on the side of truth.

RICHARD WHATELY, On the Love of Truth. (1825)

<sup>2</sup> A thing is not necessarily true because a man dies for it.

OSCAR WILDE, Portrait of Mr. W. H. (1889)

A truth ceases to be true when more than one person believes in it.

OSCAR WILDE, Phrases for the Young. (1894)

If one tells the truth, one is sure, sooner or later, to be found out.

OSCAR WILDE, Phrases for the Young.

<sup>3</sup> Pure truth hath no man seen nor e'er shall know. (καὶ τὸ μὲν σαφὲς οὐτις ἀνὴρ ἶδεν οὐδέ τις ἔσται εἰδώς.)

II—Truth: The Naked Truth

<sup>7</sup> The naked Truth. (Nuda Veritas.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 24, l. 7. (23 B.C.)

The naked truth. (Aperta veritas.)

ST. AUGUSTINE, Epistles. Epis. xxxiv, sec. 1. (A.D. 396)

We shall tell The naked Truth of what befel.

BUTLER, Hudibras, i, ii, 36. (1663)

The truth, naked and unashamed, is always unpleasant.

JAMES HUNEKER, Iconoclasts, p. 188. (1905)

<sup>8</sup> Naked Truth Needs no Shift.

WILLIAM PENN. Title of a broadside. (1674)

<sup>9</sup> The truth shows best being naked.

JOHN TAYLOR, Watermens Suit. (c. 1613)

Innocence was originally naked, and Truth keeps the same Dress still.

OSWALD DYKES, English Proverbs, p.255.(1709)

Craft must have Clothes; but Truth loves to go naked.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.1200.(1732)

Truth's best Ornament is Nakedness.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5314.

Craft must be at charge for clothes, but Truth can go naked.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1747.

III—Truth Is Mighty and Prevaieth

<sup>10</sup> Great is truth and it prevaieth. (Magna est veritas, et praeualet.)

Biblia Sacra Vulgatae Editionis: III Esdras, iv, 41. (A.D. 405) The Vulgate includes the books which were placed in Apocrypha by the editors of the "Authorized" or Protestant version of the Bible in 1611, among them III Esdras, which in the Apocrypha is I Esdras. The phrase is almost always quoted, "Truth is mighty and will prevail," and some commentators have substituted the future, praeualebit, for the present, praeualet, but praeualet is the correct rendering.

I believe that in the end the truth will conquer.

JOHN WYCLIF, to the Duke of Lancaster. (1381) As quoted by GREEN, Short History of the English People. Ch. 5.

Trueth in the ende shall preuayle.

ULPIAN FULWELL, Ars Adulandi, sig.E4.(1576)

Which of these three things is strongest, either wine, or women, or els the truth? of courtesie tel me. To tel you the truth, after my foolish opinion, and not being learned, Truth, me thinketh, is strongest.

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 38. (1578)

Truth is the strongest of all, which overcomes all things in the end.

UNKNOWN, Helpe to Discourse, p. 98. (1619)

For (magna est veritas & praeualebit) great is truth, & shall prevail.

THOMAS BROOKS, The Crown and Glory of Christianity, p. 407. (1662)

Truth, by its own sinews, will prevail.

JOHN DRYDEN, Religio Laici, l. 349. (1682)

<sup>11</sup> Truth always rises above falsehood, as oil rises above water. (La verdad siempre anda sobre la mentira como el aceite sobre el agua.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 9, 17, 50. (1615)

Truth and oil are ever above.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 5295. (1732)
Truth like oil comes to the top. (La vérité comme l'huile vient a-dessus.)

LE ROUX DE LINCX, Proverbes Français, ii, 327.
(1859) The Swiss say, "Truth cannot be buried."

Oil and truth get uppermost at last.

HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 210. (1869)

<sup>1</sup>
Above all things truth beareth away the victory. (Super omnia autem vincit veritas.)

Apocrypha: I Esdras, iii, 12. (c. A. D. 90) Two Latin proverbs are, "In veritate victoria" (Victory is in the truth), and "Vincit omnia veritas" (Truth conquers all things).

<sup>2</sup>
Better thou perish, than Truth.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 934. (1732)
Individuals may perish, but truth is eternal.

JOSEPH GERRALD, Speech, when under arrest, 1794.

<sup>3</sup>
I shall not suffer defeat for my word is truth
NU, Papyrus: Book of the Dead. Ch. xxix, l.
7. (c. 4000 B. C.)

Great is Truth, appointing a straight path; never hath it been overthrown since the reign of Osiris PTAH-HOTEP, Instruction. No. 5. (c. 3550 B. C.)
Prisse Papyrus. Gunn, tr.

<sup>4</sup>
Truth is a noble thing, and an enduring. (καλὸν μὲν ἡ ἀλήθεια, καὶ μόνιμον.)

PLATO, Laws. Sec. 663E. (c. 375 B. C.)

Truth is often eclipsed but never extinguished.
(Veritatem laborare nimis saepe, extingui nun-quam.)

QUINTUS FABIVS MAXIMUS, quoting a proverb, to Lucius Aemilius. (216 B. C.) See LIVY, *Ab
Urbe Condita*. Bk. xxii, ch. 29, sec. 19.

As for the truth, it endureth, and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth for evermore.

Apocrypha: I Esdras, iv, 38. (c. A. D. 90)

The trouthe, how so it ever come,
May for no thing ben overcome.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. vii, l.
1957. (1390)

Nothing endures but truth. (Rien ne dure que la vérité.)

VAUVENARGUES, Réflexions. No. 466. (1746)

Man passes away; generations are but shadows;
there is nothing stable but truth.

JOSAH QUINCY, JR., Speech, Boston, 17 Sept., 1830.

<sup>5</sup>
Strong in the strength of truth. (τἀληθὲς γὰρ ισχυὸν τρέφω.)

SOPHOCLES, Oedipus the King, l. 356. (c. 409 B. C.)

Truth is as vivacious, and will spread itself as fast, as the fungi, which you can by no means annihilate with your heel, for their sporules are so infinitely numerous and subtle as to resemble
"thin smoke."

H. D. THOREAU, Autumn, 5 Nov., 1840.

TRUTH CRUSHED TO EARTH SHALL RISE AGAIN, see under ERROR AND TRUTH.

IV—Truth Stranger Than Fiction

<sup>6</sup>
At times truth may not seem probable. (Le vrai peut quelquefois n'être pas vraisemblable.)

BOILEAU, L'Art Poétique. Chant. iii, l. 48. (1674)

<sup>7</sup>
'Tis strange—but true; for truth is always strange,—

Stranger than fiction.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xiv, st. 101. (1823)
Sampson was greatly struck with the revelation:
he . . . said truth was stranger than fiction.

CHARLES READE, Hard Cash. Ch. 30. (1863)
Fact is stranger than fiction.

AUGUSTUS JESSOP, Arcady for Better or Worse,
p. 98. (1881)

Truth is stranger than fiction—to some people,
but I am measurably familiar with it.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar. (1893) An American variant is,
"Truth is stranger than fiction, but not so popular."

Truth is not only stranger than fiction but far more interesting

MARGARET ECHARD, Before I Wake, p. 67. (1943)

<sup>8</sup>
Fictions meant to please should be very close to truth. (Ficta voluptatis causa sint proxima veris.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 338. (c. 20 B. C.)

There are stranger things in reality than can be found in romances.

T. C. HALIBURTON, Wise Saws. Ch. 6. (1843)
There is a truth of fiction more veracious than the truth of fact.

J. R. LOWELL, The Biglow Papers. Ser. i, No.
4. Introduction. (1848)

V—Truth Lies at the Bottom of a Well

<sup>9</sup>
Of truth we know nothing, for truth is in the depths. (ἐπεὶ δὲ οὐδὲν ἴδμεν ἐν βυθῷ γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια.)

DEMOCRITUS, Maxim. (c. 400 B. C.) As quoted by DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Pyrrho. Bk. ix, sec.
72. Quoted also by CICERO, *Academicarum
Quaestionum*, ii, 10, and by LACTANTIUS,
Institutiones Divinae, iii, 28.

<sup>10</sup>
At the bottom of that undrainable well, where, Heraclitus says, the Truth lies hidden. (Au fond du puis inépuisable au quel disoit
Heraclite estre la Verité cachée.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. ii, ch. 18. (1532)
The modern French saying is, "La vérité est cachée au fond du puits."

Democritus said, "That truth did lie in profound pits, and when it was got, it needed much re-fining."

FRANCIS BACON, Apophthegms. No. 263. (1625)
Truth, which wise men say doth lye in a well, is not recoverable but by exantlation.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Pseudodoxia Epidemica
Bk. i, ch. 5. (1646)

You know the ancient philosophers said Truth lay at the bottom of a well.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Dialogues of the Dead (1907), p. 225. (a. 1721)

Truth lieth deep, and must be fetched up at leisure.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.5304.(1732)

The unlearned . . . were all busied in getting down to the bottom of the well, where Truth keeps her little court.

LAURENCE STERNE, Tristram Shandy. Bk. iv, ch. 1. (1759)

The sages say, Dame Truth delights to dwell (Strange Mansion!) in the bottom of a well.

JOHN WOLCOT, Birthday Ode. (c. 1783)

You'd wish yourself where Truth is—in a well.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 84. (1819)

It is an old saying that Truth lies in a well, but the misfortune is, that some men will use no chain to draw her up.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. i, No. 250. (1820)

Truth keeps the bottom of her well.

JOAQUIN MILLER, Song of the South. Sec. iii, pt. 2. (c. 1873)

Truth . . . is said to lie at the bottom of a well, for the very reason, perhaps, that whoever looks down in search of her sees his own image at the bottom.

J. R. LOWELL, Democracy. (1887)

We must go to the bottom of the well for truth.

O. HENRY (W. S. PORTER), Mammon and the Archer. (1906)

Truth often hides in an ugly pool.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 380. (1938) A Chinese proverb.

1 Truth is always at the bottom of a grave.

JAMES HUNEKER, Iconoclasts, p. 63. (1905)

2 Truth is not (as Democritus said) hidden in the deeps of abisse; but rather elevated in infinite height of divine knowledge. (La vérité n'est pas, comme disoit Democritus, cachée dans le fond des abysmes, mais plustost eslevée en hauteur infinie en la cognoissance divine.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 8. (1595) Florio, tr.

There is not a truer saying in this world, than that truth lies on the surface of things.

WILLIAM MAGINN, O'Doherty's Maxims, p. 81. (1824)

Truth is not always in a well. In fact, as regards the more important knowledge, I do believe that she is invariably superficial.

E. A. POE, The Murders in the Rue Morgue. (1842) It is, of course, C. Auguste Dupin speaking.

3 Wrapping truth in darkness. (Obscuris vera involvens.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. vi, l. 100. (19 B.C.)

Truth lurks in deep hiding and is wrapped in mystery. (Involuta veritas in alto latet.)

SENECA, De Beneficiis. Bk. vii, ch. 1, sec. 6. (c. A.D. 64) But another proverb says, "Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi" (Truth fears nothing except being hidden).

VI—Truth and Falsehood

4

Truth stands, falsehood falls. Falsehood is common, truth uncommon.

Babylonian Talmud: Shabbath, fo. 104a. (c. 450)

5

There are few men so true to themselves and so settled, but that, . . . they open themselves; specially if they be put to it with a counter-dissimulation, according to the proverb of Spain, Di mentira, y sacaras verdad: Tell a lie and find a truth.

FRANCIS BACON, Of the Advancement of Learning. Bk. ii, ch. 23. (1605) The Germans have the same proverb, "Sag eine Lüge, so hörst du die Wahrheit."

Tell a lie and find the truth.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 75. (1678)

Tell a Lie, and find out the Truth.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.4324.(1732)

6

Even a liar tells a hundred truths to one lie; he has to, to make the lie good for anything.

H. W. BEECHER, Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit. (1870)

7

How can that which is true come from a lie?

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxxiv, 4. (c. 190 B.C.) Oesterley, tr.

Sow truth, if thou the truth wouldst reap:

Who sows the false shall reap the vain.

HORATIUS BONAR, He Liveth Long Who Liveth Well. (c. 1868)

8

Any fool can tell the truth, but it requires a man of some sense to know how to lie well.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Note-Books. (c. 1890)

9

Truth, fact, is the life of all things; falsity, "fiction," or whatever it may call itself, is certain to be the death.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Latter-Day Pamphlets. Ch. 8. (1850)

10

He lied so much like truth that she was deceived.

F. CHAMIER, Tom Bowling. Ch. 5. (1841)

11

The truth is bitter and disagreeable to fools; but falsehood is sweet and acceptable. (τὸ μὲν ἀληθὲς πικρὸν ἐστὶ καὶ ἀηδὴς τοῖς ἀνοήτοις· τὸ δὲ ψεῦδος γλυκὺ καὶ προσηγνές.)

ST. CHRYSOSTOM, Adagia. (c. A.D. 400) The Italians say, "Il vero punge, e la bugia unge" (Truth stings, falsehood salves over); the French, "Il n'y a que la vérité qui blesse" (It is only truth that wounds).

12

Falsehood is so near to truth that a wise man would do well not to trust himself on such a narrow edge. (Ita enim finitima sunt falsa veris . . . ut tam in praecipitem locum non debeat se sapiens committere.)

CICERO, Academica. Bk. ii, sec. 21. (c. 45 B.C.)

I would I could as easily discover the true as I can expose the false. (Utinam tam facile vera invenire possem, quam falsa convincere.)

CICERO, De Natura Deorum. Bk. i, ch. 32, sec. 91. (c. 45 B.C.)

To distinguish the false from the true. (Vero distinguere falsum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 10, l. 29. (20 B.C.)

A Hair perhaps divides the False and True.

EDWARD FITZGERALD, tr., The Rubáiyát. St. 49. (1859) The Hindus say, "Between truth and falsehood there is a distance of only four fingers."

1 Ever to that truth,
Which but the semblance of a falsehood wears.
A man, if possible, should bar his lips.
(Sempre a quel ver ch' ha faccia di menzogna De' l' uom chiuder le labbra finch' ei puote.)

DANTE, Inferno. Canto xvi, l. 124. (c. 1300)

Of that danger Dant expressly speaketh in these verses,

It is not good to tell that truth,
which seemeth like unto a lie:
For though it be no fault in deede,
yet may a man be blamde thereby.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 154. (1574) Pettie, tr.

2 Truth is beautiful. Without doubt; and so are lies.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. iii, p. 437. (1870)

3 Truth is only falsehood well disguised.

GEORGE FARQUHAR, A Constant Couple. Act iii, sc. 4. (1700)

After all, what is a lie? 'Tis but
The truth in masquerade.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xi, st. 37. (1823)

4 Truth needs not many Words; but a false Tale, a long Preamble.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5309. (1732)

5 Truth always lags behind [falsehood], limping along on the arm of time. (La verdad siempre llega la última y tarde, cojeando con el tiempo.)

BALTASAR GRACIAN, Oráculo Manual. Maxim 146. (1647)

Falsehood flies and truth comes limping after it, so that when men come to be undeceived it is too late.

JONATHAN SWIFT, The Examiner. No. 15. (1710)
A lie travels round the world while Truth is putting on her boots.

C. H. SPURGEON, Salt-Cellars. (1885)

Give a lie twenty-four hours' start, and you can never overtake it.

V. S. LEAN, Collectanea, iii, 471. (1902) The Italians, however, say, "Benchè la bugia sia veloce, la verità l'arriva" (Though a lie be swift, the truth overtakes it).

6 The most mischievous liars are those who keep sliding on the very verge of truth.

J. C. AND A. W. HARE, Guesses at Truth. (1827)

7 The art of lying is the strongest acknowledgment of the force of truth.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Table Talk: On Patronage. (1822)

8 He that trusts in a lie, shall perish in truth.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 571. (1640)

The Arabs say, "Lying is weakness, truth is health"; the Hindus, "Truth will conquer, falsehood will kill."

Better speak truth rudely, than lie covertly.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 769.

It is better to remain silent than speak the truth ill-humoredly, and so spoil an excellent dish by covering it with bad sauce.

ST. FRANCIS DE SALES, Apothegm. (c. 1600) See CAMUS, L'Esprit de S. François de Sales.

9 We know how to speak many things which are false as if they were true; but we know, when we will, to utter true things. (ἴδμεν ψεύδεα πολλὰ λέγειν ἐτύμοισιν ὁμοῖα | ἴδμεν δ', εὖτ' ἐθέλωμεν, ἀληθέα γηρύσασθαι.)

HESIOD, Theogony, l. 27. (c. 800 B.C.)

10 A lie stands on one leg, and truth on two.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 10. (1659) FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1735.

11 Does not Mr. Bryant say, that Truth gets well if she is run over by a locomotive, while Error dies of lockjaw if she scratches her finger?

O. W. HOLMES, The Professor at the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 5. (1860)

12 The ability to discriminate between that which is true and that which is false is one of the last attainments of the human mind.

WASHINGTON IRVING, The American Democrat. Ch. 44. (1838)

13 There is no worse lie than a truth misunderstood by those who hear it.

WILLIAM JAMES, The Varieties of Religious Experience, p. 355. (1902)

14 The man who fears no truths has nothing to fear from lies.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Letter to George Logan (1816)

15 All men, as far as in them lies,
Create realities of dreams;
To truth our nature proves but ice,
To falsehood, fire it seems.

(Chacun tourne en réalités,
Autant qu'il peut, ses propres songes:
L'homme est de glace aux vérités,
Il est de feu pour les mensonges.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables: Le Statuaire et la Statue de Jupiter. Bk. ix, fab. 6. (1678)

16 Against truth falsehood hath no might.

JOHN LYDGATE, The Story of Thebes. Pt. ii. (1420)

1 An innocent truth can never stand in need Of a guilty lie.

PHILIP MASSINGER, The Emperor of the East. Act v, sc. 3. (1631)

Truth never was indebted to a lie.

EDWARD YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 587. (1745)

2 It is for slaves to lie, and for free men to speak the truth. (C'estoit aux serfs de mentir, et aux libres de dire verité.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 17. (1580)
Quoting a saying of Apollonius.

3 Truth mixed with falsehood. (Mixtaque cum veris passim commenta.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. xii, l. 54. (c. A. D. 7)
A mixture of a Lie [with truth] doth ever adde Pleasure.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Truth. (1612) The Italians say, "A little truth helps the lie go down."

4 Eat the date and throw away the stone; eat the fruit and throw away the peel.

Palestinian Talmud: Hagigah, fo. 15b. (c. 450)
Distinguish between true and false.

Everything is true in part and false in part. (Chaque chose est vrai en partie, et fausse en partie.)

PASCAL, Pensées. Pt. i, art. ix, No. 63. (c. 1660)

5 The lip of truth shall be established for ever: but a lying tongue is but for a moment. (Labium veritatis firmum erit in perpetuum: qui autem testis est repentinus, concinnat linguam mendacii.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xii, 19. (c. 350 B. C.)

6 A well-intentioned lie is better than a mischief-making truth.

SADI, Gulistan. Ch. i, Apologue 1. (c. 1258)

Words that beguile thee but thy heart make glad. Outvalue truth which makes thy temper sad.

SADI, Gulistan, i. 1. (Eastwick, tr.)

Use not to lie, for that is dishonest; speak not every truth, for that is unneedful; yes, in time and place, a harmless lie is a great deal better than a hurtful truth.

ROGER ASCHAM, Letter to Mr. Howe. (1550)

Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do.

POPE, An Essay on Criticism. Pt. iii, l. 14. (1709) Quoted by FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1744.

A truth that's told with bad intent Beats all the lies you can invent.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Auguries of Innocence. (1789)

7 Better to be imprisoned for speaking truth than to gain release by falsehood.

SADI, Gulistan. Ch. viii, Maxim 83. (c. 1258)
The Danish form is, "Better suffer for truth than prosper by falsehood"; the Arabic, "Falsehood, though it seem profitable, will hurt you; truth, though it seem hurtful, will profit you," but the Poles point out, "Truth will not feed you, and a lie will not choke you."

8 Truths would be tales
Where now half tales be truths.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, ii, 2, 136. (1606)

Half the Truth is often a great Lie.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1758.

A lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies.

TENNYSON, The Grandmother. St. 8. (1859)

Half the truth is often a whole lie.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 166. (1875)

Half-truths to which men are accustomed are so much easier to pass than the golden mintage they rarely encounter!

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, Religio Journalistici, p. 32. (1924)

A lie that is half a truth is ever the hardest to fight.

PATRICIA WENTWORTH, The Chinese Shawl, p. 202. (1943) Paraphrasing Tennyson.

9 The most curious aspect of truth seems to be that nobody will believe it. We can swallow any number of falsehoods and fancies, but not the truth.

J. S. STRANGE, Look Your Last, p. 183. (1943)

10 There is nothing so false that a sparkle of truth is not in it.

M. F. TUPPER, Proverbial Philosophy: Of Truth in Things False. (1839)

TRYING

11 By trying you shall learn. (πειράσας νοήσεις.)

ANACREON (?), Odes. Ode xxviii, l. 12. (c. 550 B. C.)

12 In great things to have tried is enough. (In magnis vel voluisse sat est.)

ERASMUS, Moriae Encomium. Sec. 49. (1511)

13 He could willingly have found it in his hart to trie his fortune.

ROBERT JOHNSON, tr., The Worlde, p. 59. (1601)

Who will willingly be the first to try our hand.

LORD SHAFTESBURY, Characteristicks of Men, i, 1. (1711)

Why should I be debarred the liberty of trying my hand as well as another?

ABRAHAM TUCKER, The Light of Nature Pursued, i, 384. (1768)

He determined to try his hand.

WASHINGTON IRVING, Knickerbocker's History of New York. Bk. v, ch. 3. (1809)

They think they are trying their luck, as the phrase is.

AUGUSTUS DE MORGAN, An Essay on Probabilities, i, 21. (1838)

14 No one knows what he can do till he tries. (Quid quisque posset, nisi temptando nesciit.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 586. (c. 43 B. C.)
See also under ABILITY.

I have often heard my poor old uncle say that no man knows what he can do till he tries.

MONTAGU WILLIAMS, Leaves of a Life. Ch. 13. (1893)

No man knows what he can do until he's tried it.

HOWIE, Murder for Christmas, p. 165. (1941)

You never could tell what a body could do till they tried.

LASSWELL, Suds in Your Eye, p. 147. (1942)

<sup>1</sup> No jokes, old boy; no trying it on me.

THACKERAY, Vanity Fair. Ch. 34. (1848)

To try it on, to seek to outwit, get the better of.

To try it on the dog, to experiment at another's expense or risk.

FARMER AND HENLEY, Slang Dictionary: Try. (1903)

(ἡς Τροίαν περὶ ὠμενοὶ ἦνθον Ἀχαιοί, καλλίστα παίδων· πείρα θην πάντα τελείται.)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls. No. xv, l. 64. (c. 270 B.C.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, ii, 37, gives the more familiar form in Latin, "Tentantes ad Troiam pervenerunt Graeci" (By trying the Greeks got into Troy).

<sup>3</sup> Nocke anew, nocke anew, i.e. try again.

UNKNOWN. In Berkeley MSS, iii, 32. (1639)

You will have to try and try again.

FREDERICK MARRYAT, The Children of the New Forest. Ch. 4. (1847)

If at first you don't succeed,

Try, try, try again.

W. E. HICKSON, Try and Try Again. (c. 1850)

The Scripture says, "Try! try! again!"

LANGDON MITCHELL, The New York Idea. Act ii. (1906)

If at first you don't succeed, pry, pry, pry again.

PHILIP MACDONALD, Warrant for X, p. 223. (1937)

And the saying grew, as sayings will grow

From hard endeavor and bangs and bumps:

"He got in a mighty hard row of stumps;

But he tried, and died trying to hoe his row."

JOAQUIN MILLER, A Hard Row for Stumps. (a. 1897)

TUB

WILLIAM BULLEIN, A Dialogue Against the Fever Pestilence (E.E.T.S.), p. 65. (1564)

They would have every fatte . . . stand on his own bottom.

GERVASE BABINGTON, Exposition of the Commandments, vi, 53. (1583)

Every tub must stand upon his own bottom.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 66. (1639)

Every tub must stand upon its own bottom.

Every man must give an account for himself.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 102. (1670)

Presumption said, Every fat must stand upon his own bottom.

BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress (1877). Pt. i. p. 37. (1678)

"Every vessel must stand on its own bottom," said I; . . . "I take pleasure in being independent."

GEORGE BORROW, Romany Rye. Ch. 29. (1857)

There is an old saying, "Let every tub stand on its own bottom."

CHARLES READE, Griffith Gaunt. Ch. 6. (1866)

HUNEKER, Painted Veils, p. 245. (1920)

Fetch forth the lazar kite . . . Doll Tearsheet

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V, ii, 1, 79. (1599)

Luc.: How doth thy mistress? . . . Procures she still?

Clo.: Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, iii, 2, 57 (1604)

Pickl'd up to the very Nose in the Powdering-Tub of Sin and Salvation.

DYKES, English Proverbs, p. 83. (1709)

<sup>6</sup> He is at first entertained with trifles . . . and little images of things are laid before him, like a cock-boat to a whale, only to play withal.

JEREMY TAYLOR, Holy Dying. Bk. i.ch.3.(1651) Sea-men have a Custom when they meet a Whale, to fling him out an empty Tub, . . . to divert him from laying violent Hands upon the Ship.

JONATHAN SWIFT, A Tale of a Tub: Author's Preface. (1704)

When a man talks to a woman upon such subjects, let her be ever so much in Alt, 'tis strange if he cannot throw out a tub to a whale;—that is to say, if he cannot divert her from resenting one bold thing, by uttering two or three full as bold.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Clarissa. Ch. 3. (1748)

A wise writer . . . should throw in now and then an indiscretion in his conduct to play with, as seamen do a tub to a whale.

FRANCIS BROOKE, The History of Lady Julia Mandeville (1820), p. 148. (1763)

We find it a mere tub to amuse the whale.

EARL OF MALMESBURY, Diaries, i, 23. (1768)

A tub thrown to a whale, To make the fish a fool.

RHODES, Bombastes Furioso, i, 16. (1810)

TUNE

<sup>1</sup> There's many a good tune played on an old fiddle.

SAMUEL BUTLER, The Way of All Flesh. Ch. 61. (a. 1902)

<sup>2</sup> They play one tune and dance another.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 18. (1639)

<sup>3</sup> The Tune I still retain, but not the Words.

JOHN DRYDEN, tr., Vergil's Pastorals, iv, 62. (1697)

<sup>4</sup> Now schalt thou singe an other song.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. i, l. 260 (1390)

O gin I live and bruik my life,

I'll gar ye change your tune.

UNKNOWN, The Wedding of Robin Hood and Little John. (c. 1600) See CHILD, Ballads, iv, 422.

I imagine he would sing a different tune if the blue coats ever get to Richmond.

HENTY, With Lee in Virginia, p. 124. (1890)

PINDAR, Nemean Odes. Ode vii, l. 69. (c. 485 B.C.) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, ii, 47, with the Latin, "Extra cantionem."

How many occasions are there to bring us out of tune?

LAURENCE TOMSON, tr., Calvin on Timothy, 280/2. (1579)

Siluer in my Pockets do not ring,

All's out of tune with mee in eu'ry thing.

SAMUEL ROWLANDS, Hell's Broke Loose. (1605)

<sup>6</sup> Jack Whaley had a cow,

And he had nought to feed her;

He took a pipe and played a tune,

And bid the cow consider.

UNKNOWN, Jack Whaley. (c. 1725) As quoted by LADY GRANVILLE, Letters, ii, 218. (1836) Notes and Queries, ser. ii, vol. ii, p. 309, gives a longer version:

There was an old man and he had an old cow,

But he had no fodder to give her,

So he took up his fiddle and played her a tune,

Consider, good cow, consider;

This isn't the time for the grass to grow;

Consider, good cow, consider.

That is the old Tune upon the Bag-Pipe.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.4360. (1732)

The tune the old cow died of throughout, grunts and groans of instruments.

LADY GRANVILLE, Letters (1894), ii, 218.

(1836) The phrase originally referred to the supposedly "old ballad" given above, but was afterwards applied to any tedious or ill-played piece of music.

This tune, "which the old cow died of," as the saying is, used to be their horror.

FREDERICK MARRYAT, Japhet in Search of a Father. Ch. 68. (1836)

That is enough of the tune the old cow died of;

take and play something to keep our hearts up.

CHARLES READE, Love Me Little, Love Me Long. Ch. 3. (1859)

What are they singing? It sounds like the tune the cat died of.

H. C. BAILEY, Mr. Fortune Finds a Pig, p. 235. (1943)

TURKEY

<sup>7</sup> They fought with that unspeakable Turk. King Machahal.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Essays: The Nibelungen Lied. (1831) Westminster Review. No. 29.

The unspeakable Turk should be immediately struck out of the question.

CARLYLE, Letter to a Meeting at St. James's Hall. (1876)

Mr. Gladstone published an article in the Contemporary Review (1876), advocating the expulsion of the "unspeakable Turk, bag and baggage," from Europe.

MAXWELL, Life of W. H. Smith, p. 151.

The yoke of the unspeakable Turk.

H. DE WINDT, Through Savage Europe. Ch. 8. (1907)

<sup>8</sup> The Turkish empire is the greatest . . . the sun ever saw. . . . Populous it is not, for . . . it lieth waste, according to the old proverb, Grass springeth not where the grand signior's horse setteth his foot.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy Warre. Bk. v, ch. 30. (1639)

Of whom you may say, as of the Great Sultan's horse, where he treads the grass grows no more.

JOHN CLEVELAND, Works (1742), p.77. (c.1650)

Where the Turks horse doth once tread the grass never grows.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 6. (1659)

Where the Great Turk's Horse treads, Grass never grows.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.5664. (1732)

Where he has trodden no grass will grow. (Tsou liau lu pu shêng ts'ao.)

WILLIAM SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1257. (1875)

The Turks destroyed everything . . . as they advanced, illustrating the aphorism: "Where the hoof of the Turkish horse treads no blade of grass ever grows."

FREDERICK VILLIERS, Pictures of Many Wars, p. 11. (1902)

<sup>9</sup> The Turks are the people of the wrath of God.

MARTIN LUTHER, Table-Talk. (1569)

<sup>10</sup> [The Ottoman Empire] has the body of a sick old man, who tried to appear healthy, although his end was near.

SIR THOMAS ROE, while ambassador to the Ottoman Porte. 1621. See BUCHANAN, Letters, p. 375.

[The Ottoman Empire] whose sick body was not supported by a mild and regular diet, but by a powerful treatment, which continually exhausted it.

MONTESQUIEU, Persian Letters. Bk. i, Let. 19. (1721)

We have on our hands a sick man—a very sick man.

NICHOLAS I OF RUSSIA, to Sir George Hamilton Seymour, at St. Petersburg, 21 Feb., 1853. See Annual Register, 1853, p. 252.

It was all right not to let the "sick man" be frightened into convulsions.

JAMES MARTINEAU, Essays, i, 428. (1855)

The Sick Man of Europe. Turkey. This political and journalistic cliché is obsolescent: Kemal Atatürk changed all that. It was coined in a conversation between the Czar Nicholas I and Sir G. Seymour on Feb. 21, 1853; the phrase caught on almost immediately.

PARTRIDGE, Dictionary of Clichés. (1941)

1 An you be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, iii, 4, 57. (1598) To change completely from a Christian to an infidel.

If the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, iii, 2, 287. (1600)

Claw me, and I'll claw thee.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 107. (1678)

For one good turn another doth itch,

Claw my elbow and I'll claw thy breech.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 138. (1678)

Ka me, ka thee—it is a proverb all over the world.

WALTER SCOTT, Kenilworth. Ch. 5. (1821)
There are countless variations: "Tickle me and I'll tickle you"; "Scratch me and I'll scratch you" (See under SCRATCHING), "Give me fire and I'll give you a light" (Arabic). The French say, "Qui plaisir fait, plaisir requiert," or "Une bonté l'autre requiert" (One kindness requires another), or "A bon jour beau retour" (To a fine day a fine return), or "Passe moi la casse, et je vous passerai le séné" (Pass me the cassia and I'll pass you the senna), with rhubarb sometimes for cassia. The German form is "Ein Dienst [good turn] ist des andern Werth," or "Wie du Mir, so ich Dir"; the Italian, "Qual ballata, tal sonata"; the Spanish. "Donde las dan, las toman."

<sup>8</sup> Giffe-gaffe was a good fellow.

HUGH LATIMER, Third Sermon before Edward VI, p. 140. (1549) "Somewhat was given to them before, and they must needs give something again."

Give gave is a good fellow.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains (1870), p. 322. (1605)

Giff gaff was a good man, but he is soon weary. Giffe gaffe is one good turn for another.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 96. (1670)

Gif-gaf makes gude friends, ye ken.

SCOTT, Heart of Midlothian. Ch. 16. (1818)

I have pledged my word for your safety, and you must give me yours to be private in the matter—giff-gaff, you know.

WALTER SCOTT, Redgauntlet. Ch. 12. (1824)
Giff-gaff . . . mutual obligation, reciprocity, used especially in the proverbial saying: giff-gaff makes good friends.

TWEEDLEDUM AND TWEEDLEDEE

5
Some say, compared to Bononcini,
That Mynheer Handel's but a ninny;
Others aver that he to Handel
Is scarcely fit to hold a candle.

Strange all this difference should be "Twixt Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee!"

JOHN BYROM, On the Feud Between Handel and Bononcini. This is a revised version differing slightly from the original one, which appeared in the London Journal, 5 June, 1725. Proverbially, tweedledum and tweedle-dee are two things or parties the difference between which is insignificant, or of no importance.

Swift could not see the difference between tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum.

THACKERAY, English Humourists. Ch. 5. (1851)
Do you believe in tweedledee or in tweedledum?

JANE O. BROOKFIELD, Influence, i, 76. (1871)

To the ears of Mopsy and Dopsy it was all tweedledum and tweedledee.

MARY E. BRADDON, Mount Royal. Bk. ii, ch. 10. (1882)

6
Squeaking fife and rumbling drum,
Tweedle dee and tweedle dum.

UNKNOWN, Trinculo's Trip. (1769)

Two hours of tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee were too much for me.

MRS. ANNE GRANT, referring to a concert. (1805) In CAMPBELL, Memoirs, i, 59.

Mary and I are to sit next the orchestra in the pit, next the tweedledees.

CHARLES LAMB, Letter to Manning, 5 Dec., 1806. Next the violins.

Two ordinary violin players quarreled . . . to such a pitch that each tweedle-dum offered to play the opposing tweedle-dee, to play him for a whole year's salary.

FREDERICK REYNOLDS, Life and Times, ii, 288. (1826)

TWILIGHT

7
The twilight of the Gods approaches.

THOMAS GRAY, The Descent of Odin: Note. (1768) "The twilight of the gods" is a translation of the Icelandic ragna rökkr, in Scandinavian mythology the destruction of the gods and of the world in conflict with the powers of evil.—O.E.D.

Voltaire was . . . in the habit of saying that he lived in the twilight of Christianity, meaning thereby that its sun would soon go down.

WILLIAM SPARROW, Sermons, xix, 251. (1877)

The twilight of the gods draws down apace,

Grandeur is dead, and time is very old.

FRANKLIN McDUFFEE, Michaelangelo. (1924)

This poem won the Newdigate prize while its author was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford. "Le crépuscule des dieux" is the French phrase.

Not even Hercules against two. (οὐδὲ Ἡρακλῆς πρὸς δύο.)

ARCHILOCHUS, Epigram. (c. 650 B. C.) See ARISTIDES, Orations, ii, 137. Condensed from, "The man who excels in strength, though stronger than one, would be overcome by two."

Even Hercules is not a match for two. (πρὸς δύο οὐδ' ὁ Ἡρακλῆς οἶός τε εἶναι.)

PLATO, Phaedo. Sec. 89c. (c. 385 B. C.) Quoted as a proverb which originated, of course, from the story of the second labor of Hercules, the killing of the Hydra, a poisonous water-snake with many heads. Hera, who hated Hercules because he was the son of her consort Zeus by Amphitryon's wife, Alcmena, sent a huge crab to help the hydra, and as it was not fair that Hercules should have to meet two monsters at once, the proverb arose. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, v, 39, with the Latin, "Ne quidem Hercules adversus duos," and a reference also to Homer's line, quoted above.

Do not contend with two. (Noli pugnare duobus.)
CATULLUS, Odes. Ode lxii, l. 64. (c. 57 B. C.)

But two to one, can be no equal lot,
For why? the Latin proverb saith, you wot,
Sit quisque similis inter suos,
Ne Hercules enim contra duos.

1 This hand is hostile only to tyrants, and draws the sword only to attain placid quiet under liberty. (Manus haec inimica tyrannis Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem.)

ALGERNON SIDNEY, Lines, written in the album of the University of Copenhagen, 1660. It has been claimed that the first line was not original. See Notes and Queries, 10 March, 1866. The second line was adopted as the motto of the state of Massachusetts.

This hand to tyrants ever sworn the foe,
For Freedom only strikes the deadly blow.

J. Q. ADAMS, Written in an Album, 1842. A free rendering of Sidney's lines.

2 Tyrants are a money-loving race. (τὸ δ' ἐκ τυράννων αἰσχροκέρδεια φιλεῖ.)

SOPHOCLES, Antigone, l. 1056. (c. 441 B. C.)

3 Tyrants are wise through converse with the wise. (σοφὸι τύραννοι τῶν σοφῶν συνουσία.)

SOPHOCLES, Locrian Ajax, Frag. (c. 400 B. C.)

PLATO quotes the line both in Theages (125B) and in the Republic (568A), in both places attributing it to Euripides, but it seems really to belong to Sophocles. AULUS GELLIUS quotes it (xiii, 19), and ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, v, 97, giving the Latin, "Sapientes tyranni, sapientium congressu."

4 The most wonderful thing I ever saw was an aged tyrant. (γέροντα τύραννον.)

THALES, Apothegm. (c. 585 B. C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Thales. Bk. i, sec. 36; PLUTARCH, Moralia, 578D. In 147B, Plutarch has Thales ascribe the aphorism to Molpagoras, the Ionian.

Few indeed are the kings who go down to Ceres' son-in-law [Pluto] save by sword and slaughter, few the tyrants that perish by a bloodless death. (Sicca morte tyranni.)

JUVENAL, Satires, x, 112. (c. A. D. 120)

5 Clever tyrants are never punished. (Les habiles tyrans ne sont jamais punis.)

LOUIS PHILIPPE, Speech, from the throne, January, 1843. He was boasting of the friendly relations between France and England, during Guizot's administration of foreign affairs.

The cordial understanding which exists between the governments of France and Great Britain. (La cordiale entente qui existe entre le gouvernement français et celui de la Grande-Bretagne.)

UNKNOWN, Article, in Le Charivari, Paris, 6 Jan., 1844, reporting a speech by Guizot.

<sup>11</sup> Yes, that is so fine that I don't understand a drop of it. (Oui ça est si beau que je n'y entends goutte.)

MOLIÈRE, Le Médecin Malgré Lui. Act ii, sc. 4. (1666) From this, perhaps, the French proverb, "Cela doit être beau, car je n'y comprends rien" (That ought to be good, for I understand nothing of it).

<sup>12</sup> With all thy getting get understanding. (In omni possessione tua acquire prudentiam.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, iv, 7. (c. 350 B. C.)

That understanding is the noblest which knows not the most but the best things. (Ille intellectus qui plura intelligit non est noblior, sed qui digniora.)

MADAME DE STAËL, Corinne. Bk. xviii, ch. 5. (1807) The more famous phrase, "Tout comprendre c'est tout pardonner" (To understand everything is to forgive everything), has also been attributed to Madame de Staël, but has not been found in her works. It is probably a misquotation, or, rather, an improved rendering, of the sentence given above. It has been widely quoted, from TOLSTOY, War and Peace, bk. i, pt. i, ch. 26 (1865), to MATTHEW HEAD, The Smell of Money, p. 84 (1943) The Germans say, "Ein Ding ist nicht böse, wenn man es gut versteht" (Nothing is bad if we understand it right).

He who understands everything understands nothing, and he who forgives everything forgives nothing.

MIGUEL DE UNAMUNO, Essays and Soliloquies. p. 93. (1925)

To know all is to forgive all.

UNIVERSE

1
Had I been present at the creation, I would have given some useful hints for the better ordering of the universe.

ALFONSO X, THE WISE, Apothegm. (c. 1275)

Alfonso, King of Leon and Castile, called "El Sabio" (the wise), was commenting on Ptolemy's astronomical tables, which he greatly improved in the so-called Alphonsine Tables.

This saying of Alphonso about Ptolemy's astronomy, "that it was pity the Creator had not taken advice," is still remembered by mankind—this and no other of his many sayings.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Frederick the Great. Bk. ii, ch. 7. (1858)

Ah Love! could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of Things entire,

Would we not shatter it to bits—and then
Remould it nearer to the Heart's Desire?

FITZGERALD, tr., The Rubáiyát, St. 99. (1859)

2
We must conceive of the whole universe as one commonwealth of which both gods and men are members. (Universus hic mundus sit una civitas communis deorum atque hominum existimanda.)

CICERO, De Legibus. Bk. i, ch. 7, sec. 23. (c. 46 B. C.)

The Universe is, as it were, a state, of which we are fellow-members. (ὁ κόσμος ὡς αὐτὴ πόλις ἐστίν.)

There is nothing uncultivated, nothing sterile, nothing dead in the universe.

G. W. LEIBNITZ, The Monadology. Ch. 69. (1714)
There is no chance, and no anarchy, in the universe. All is system and gradation. Every god is there sitting in his sphere.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Illusions. (1860)

8
All that is in tune with thee, O Universe, is in tune with me. Nothing that is in due time for thee is too early or too late for one. (πάν μοι συναρμόζει, ὃ σοὶ εὐάρμοστον ἐστίν, ὃ κόσμος.)

MARCUS AURELIUS, Meditations. Bk. iv, sec. 23.

(C. A. D. 174) Ralph Waldo Trine used the phrase, In Tune with the Infinite, as the title of a book published in 1897.

Each one of us is part of the soul of the universe.

PLOTINUS, Ennead iv, Tractate 3. (C. A. D. 250)

<sup>7</sup> He may carry an ox who has carried a calf.
(Taurum tollet qui vitulum sustulerit.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. ii, No. 51.

(1508) The proverb is based on the story of Milo, the famous athlete of Croton, who lived about 500 B.C. He is said to have started carrying a calf, and did so every day until it grew to a bull. The adage, as Erasmus says, shows the force of habit, and how use may increase both the mental and bodily powers to an almost incredible degree. Also as BLAND, Proverbs, i, 49, points out, "to show the necessity of eradicating the first germs of vice in children, as, if they be suffered to fix themselves, they will in time become too powerful to be subdued." Included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, with the rendering, "He that hath borne a calfe, shall also beare a bull," and the comment, "He that accustometh hym selfe to lytle thynges, by lytle and lytle shal be able to go a waye with greater thynges."

Able to indure labour, as Milo was able to carry a bull, because he used to carry hym a calfe.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. iii, p. 70. (1574) Pettie, tr. Shakespeare mentions Milo only once in the plays, Troilus and Cressida, ii, 3, 259, where he calls him "bull-bearing Milo."

The wrestler, according to the old Greek parable, who began by carrying a calf on his shoulders, got to carry an ox by and by.

USEFULNESS

<sup>1</sup> Usefulness and baseness cannot exist in the same thing. (In eadem re utilitas et turpitudine esse non potest.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk.iii,ch.8,sec.35.(c.45 B. C.)

<sup>2</sup> As useless as Monkey's Grease.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 744. (1732)

As much use as a cow has for side pockets.

J. C. BRIDGE, Cheshire Proverbs, p. 18. (1917)

In bed or at board about as much use to a man as a cold in the head.

FRANCIS ILES, Before the Fact. Ch. 6. (1932) A Scottish proverb says, "Wood in a wilderness, moss on a mountain, and wit in a poor man's pow, are little thought of."

<sup>3</sup> All things in their being are good for something.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 522. (1640) The Germans say, "Kein Ding ist so schlecht dass es nicht zu etwas nützen sollte" (There is nothing so vile as not to be good for something); the Italians, "Ogni cosa serve a qualche cosa" (Everything is good for something).

There is nothing useless to persons of sense (Il n'est rien d'inutile aux personnes de sens.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables: Le Lion s'en Allant en Guerre. Bk. v, fab. 19. (1668) The other animals wished to leave the ass and the rabbit behind when they went to war, but the lion said, "No, the ass will frighten the enemy with its braying, and the rabbit can serve us as courier."

Everything in the world is good for something DRYDEN, Spanish Friar. Act iii, sc. 2. (1681)

Lay Things by; they may come to Use.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No.3154.(1732)

Keep a thing seven years and you will find a use for it.

H.G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p.436. (1855)

<sup>4</sup> Nothing is useful which cannot at the same time be harmful. (Nil prodest, quod non laedere possit idem.)

OVID, Tristia. Bk. ii, l. 266. (c. A. D. 9) The Germans say, "Was nützen kann, das kann auch schaden" (What can benefit can also injure).

<sup>5</sup> Unless what we do is useful, glory is vain. (Nisi utile est quod facimus, stulta est gloria.)

PHAEDRUS, Fables. Bk. iii, fab. 17, l. 12. (c. 25 B. C.)

<sup>6</sup> We flee what is useful and love what is harmful. (Quod fugimus prodest, et quod amamus obest.)

UGO BARDUS SULMONENSIS, Apologue xlvii. (c. 1300) The concluding line of his version of Aesop's fable of the stag.

We make a fuss over the beautiful, we despise the useful. (Nous faisons cas du beau, nous méprisons l'utile.)

LA FONTAINE, Fables: Le Cerf se Voyant Dans

l'Eau. Bk. vi, fab. 9. (1668) This is the fable of the stag which, seeing its image in the water, admired its spreading antlers but despised its legs as being too thin. But its legs would have saved it from the hounds had not its antlers caught in a tree and held it fast <sup>7</sup> Useful as a shin of beef, which has a big bone for the big dog, a little bone for the little dog, and a sinew for the cat.

UNKNOWN, Notes and Queries, iv, vii, 9. (1871)

THE BEAUTIFUL IS THE USEFUL, see under BEAUTY

USURY

<sup>8</sup> Usurers' purses and women's plackets are never satisfied.

NATHAN BAILEY, Dictionary: Usurer (1736)

<sup>9</sup> What is usury, but venyme of patrimony and a lawful thief that telleth his intent. (Car usure est la destruction de tous heritages.)

SAINT BERNARD, Le Regime de Mesnage. (c. 1130)

<sup>10</sup> Usurers are alwaies good Husbands.

NICHOLAS BRETON, Crossing of Proverbs. (1616)

<sup>11</sup> Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury.

Old Testament: Deuteronomy, xxiii. 20. (c. 650 B. C.) "Usury" in the biblical sense was what is now called "interest," not excessive or illegal interest as the modern meaning is.

He who lives by usury in this world shall not live in the world to come.

Midrash: Exodus Rabbah, p. 31. (c. A. D. 250)

The proverb says, "If you give out your money in usury you will lose what you gain as well as what you have."

Midrash: Leviticus Rabbah, p. 3 "Usury is murder," is a Hebrew proverb.

<sup>12</sup> There is no merchandise but usury.

THOMAS NASHE, Works (Grosart), iv, 139. (1593) Quoted as a proverb

<sup>13</sup> The usurer is as deaf as a door-nail.

THOMAS WILSON, A Discourse upon Usury. (1572)

To speak of a usurer at the table, mars the wine.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 972. (1640)

UTOPIA

SIR THOMAS MORE. (1516) Title of book describing an imaginary island with a perfect system of government; hence an ideally perfect place or state of things. From the Greek οὐ (not), plus τόπος, a place: "Nowhere Land," "The Never-Never Land." The full title of the book, which was written in Latin, was Libellus vere aureus de optimo reip. statu, deque nova Insula Utopiae, which Ralph Robinson translated into English in 1551 as A fruteful and pleasaunt work of the newe yle called Utopia.

I do not thinke that . . . there is any such fourth place or Purgatory at all (vnles it be in M. More's Vtopia).

JOHN FOXE, Book of Martyrs, p.1156/2.(1570)
In the Country of Utopia, they use no other kind of artillery.

ANTHONY BREWER, Lingua. Bk. ii, ch. 6.(1607)

The reports of this his voyage savour more of an Vtopia . . . then of true Historie.

SAMUEL PURCHAS, Pilgrimage, p. 708. (1613)

That Opinion must be sent to Utopia.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Usury. (1625)

It is a dream fit for nothing but Utopia.

JOHN CROWNE, Sir Courtly Nice. Act i. (1685)

No romantic impracticable Utopia.

BISHOP WILLIAM WARBURTON, The Divine Legation of Moses, i, 272. (1738)

The law-suits . . . will not permit me to go in search of my Utopia.

HENRY BROOKE, Fool of Quality, ii, 213.(1760)

An acre in Middlesex is better than a principality in Utopia.

T. B. MACAULAY, Essays: Lord Bacon. (1837)

Valour that parleys, is near yielding.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 588

A valiant man's look is more than a coward's sword.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 710.

THE VALIANT TASTE OF DEATH BUT ONCE, see under DEATH.

<sup>9</sup> A valiant man

Ought not to undergo or tempt a danger,

But worthily, and by selected ways.

BEN JONSON, New Inn. Act iv, sc. 4. (1629)

Who's wisely valiant will avoid the foe.

SIR SAMUEL TUKE, The Adventures of Five Hours. Act ii. (1663)

Real valour consists not in being insensible to danger, but in being prompt to confront and disarm it.

SCOTT, Peveril of the Peak. Ch. 6. (1822)

1
I never thought an angry person valiant. . . .
No man is valiantly by being angry,
But he that could not valiant be without.

BEN JONSON, New Inn. Act iv, sc. 4. (1629)

2 Rivalry in valor spurred them on. (Stimulus dedit aemula virtus.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. i, l. 120. (c. A. D. 60)

More childish valorous than manly wise.

Valor has its limits, like the other virtues (La vaillance a ses limites, comme les autres vertus.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. i, ch. 14. (1580)

4
You will find many men most unjust, impious, intemperant, and ignorant, and yet extremely valorous. (ἀρδαιοτάτους δὲ διαφερόντως.)

PLATO, Protagoras. Sec. 349D. (c. 389 B. C.)

A man may be very valiant, and yet impious and vicious.

DRYDEN, The Aeneid: Dedication. (1697)

5
Valor grows by daring, fear by delay. (Audendo virtus crescit, tardando timor.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 43. (c. 43
B. C.) Other Latin proverbs are, "Gaudet tentamine virtus" (Valor delights in the test), and "Virescit vulnere virtus" (Valor flourishes by wounds).

Valor wins success in hazards. (Felicitem in dubiis virtus impetrat.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 227. "Ad-versa virtute repello" (I repulse evil chances by valor) is another proverbial phrase. the motto of the Denison family.

Whatever is done with valor is done with glory
(Quicquid fit cum virtute fit cum gloria.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 590.

It is better to trust to valor than to luck. (Vir-tuti melius quam fortunae creditur.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 711.

He who sees the spoil of valor rejoices in the labor. (Virtutis spolia cum videt, gaudet labor.)

VANITY FAIR

10 Then I saw in my Dream, that when they were got out of the wilderness, they presently saw a town before them, and the name of that Town is Vanity, and at the town there is a Fair kept, called Vanity Fair. It is kept all the year long, it beareth the name of Vanity Fair because the town where 'tis kept is lighter than Vanity; and also because all that is there sold, or that cometh thither, is Vanity.

JOHN BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress (1900). Pt. i. p. 82. (1678)

Such is the Palais Royal;—a vanity fair—a mart of sin and seduction!

JOHN SCOTT, A Visit to Paris in 1814, p. 137. (1816)

Carrying so many bonny lasses to barter modestly for conceit and levity at the metropolitan Vanity Fair.

WALTER SCOTT, Chronicles of the Canongate. Ch. 3. (1827)

There is a great quantity of eating and drinking, making love and jilting, . . . smoking, cheating, fighting. . . . Yes, this is Vanity Fair; not a moral place certainly; nor a merry one, though very noisy.

<sup>7</sup> The Phocaeans won, yet it was but a Cadmean victory. (Καδμείη νίκη.)

HERODOTUS, History. Bk. i, ch. 166. (c. 445 B.C.)

A Cadmean victory is one in which victor and vanquished suffer alike. There are two explanations of the origin of the phrase: (1) Cadmus, king of Phoenicia, having killed the dragon which guarded the fountain of Dirce, gave its teeth to Jason to sow, hoping that the armed men which would spring from them would kill him, but, acting on Medea's advice, Jason cast a stone among them, and they fell upon and slew each other. See APOLLONIUS RHODIUS, The Argonautica, bk. iii, l. 1026 et seq. (2) Polynices and Eteocles, sons of Oedipus and descendants of Cadmus, fought for the possession of Thebes and killed each other. See AESCHYLUS, Seven Against Thebes. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, viii, 34, with the Latin, "Cadmea victoria." See also PLATO, Laws, sec. 641C.

Another such victory over the Romans, and we are undone. (ἄν ἔτι μίαν μάχην Ῥωμαῖους νικήσωμεν, ἀπολούμεθα παντελῶς.)

PYRRHUS, King of Epirus, referring to his dearly bought victory at Asculum, 280 B.C. See PLUTARCH, Lives: Pyrrhus. Ch. 21, sec. 9.

Hence a "Pyrrhic victory," which costs the victor more than the vanquished.

There is really such a thing as a Cadmean victory. (ἔστι γὰρ ὡς ἀληθῶς καὶ νίκη Καδμεία.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Education of Children, 10A. (c. A.D. 95)

Men of old gave the name of "Cadmean victory" to no other than that of the brothers at Thebes, as being the most shameful and the worst of victories.

The millionaire of "easy virtue."

J. R. McCULLOCH, The Principles of Taxation. Bk. i, ch. 4. (1845)

3 Virtue alone is true nobility. (Nobilitas sola est atque unica virtus.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. viii, l. 20. (c. A.D. 120)
The usual Latin form is, "Virtus sola nobilitat" (Virtue alone ennobles). See under NOBILITY.

Birth is nothing where virtue is not. (La naissance n'est rien où la vertu n'est pas.)

MOLIÈRE, Don Juan. Act iv, sc. 6. (1665)

4 No virtue is ever so strong that it is beyond temptation.

IMMANUEL KANT, Lecture, at Königsberg. (1775)

5 If it is usual to be deeply moved by rare things, why are we so little moved by virtue? (S'il est ordinaire d'être vivement touché des choses rares, pourquoi le somme-nous si peu de la vertu?)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Pt.i, sec. 25. (1688)
Virtue is praised by all, but practised by few.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5379. (1732)
Virtue has always been in a minority on earth. (La vertu fut toujours en minorité sur la terre.)

ROBESPIERRE, Epigram. (c. 1793)
There are no two things so much talked of, and so seldom seen, as virtue and the funds.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. i, No. 312. (1820)

6 Though indolence and timidity keep us to the path of duty, virtue often gets all the credit. (Pendant que la paresse et la timidité nous retiennent dans notre devoir, notre vertu en a souvent tout l'honneur.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 169. (1665)
Virtues lose themselves in self-interest, as rivers lose themselves in the sea. (Les vertus se perdent dans l'intérêt, comme les fleuves se perdent dans la mer.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 171.
Men's virtues, like fruits, have their season. (Le mérite des hommes a sa saison aussi bien que les fruits.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 291.

7 Virtue would not go so far if vanity did not keep it company. (La vertu n'irait pas si loin si la vanité ne lui tenait compagnie.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 200. (1665)
Virtue would not go far, if a little Vanity walked not with it.

GEORGE FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5390. (1732)

8 He is altogether virtuous, yet clothed in rags.

LANGDON, Babylonian Proverbs: Babylonian Tablets, K. 4347. (c. 2300 B.C.)

He saugh that under low degree
Was ofte vertu hid.

CHAUCER, The Clerkes Tale, l. 369. (c. 1388)

I prize poor virtue with a rag
Better than vice with both the Indies.

FLETCHER, Faithful Friends. Act iv, sc. 4. (a. 1625)

Virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm.

DRYDEN, tr. Horace. Bk. iii, ode 29, l. 55. (1685)
He is ill clothed that is bare of virtue.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1735.
Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake.

BARTLEY T. CAMPBELL, The White Slave. Act iii. (1882) Carved on Campbell's monument in St. Mary's cemetery, Pittsburgh, Pa

9 To produce without possessing; to work without expecting; to enlarge without usurping: this is the supreme virtue!

LAO-TSZE, Tao-teh-king (The Way of Virtue) Sec. 10. Repeated in sec. 51. (c. 550 B.C.)
With virtue and quietness one may conquer the world.

LAO-TSZE, Tao-teh-king. Sec. 45.
He who follows the path of virtue becomes as a little child.

LAO-TSZE, Tao-teh-king. Sec. 55.

10 To many people virtue consists mainly in repenting faults, not in avoiding them.

G. C. LICHTENBERG, Reflections. (1799)

11 Virtue rejoices when it pays dear for its existence. (Laetius est, quotiens magno sibi constat, honestum.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. ix, l. 404. (c. 60 A.D.) Quoted by MONTAIGNE, i, 40. Florio expands the line into a couplet:

Honesty makes chiefest cheare
When it doth cost it selfe most deare.
The French is, "La vertu est d'autant plus douce qu'elle nous a plus coûté."

12 Vertue is harboured in the heart of him that most men esteeme mishapen.

JOHN LYL, Euphues (Arber), p. 53. (1579)
Vertue may well fatte my minde, but it will neuer feede mine eie.

LYL, Euphues and His England, p. 284. (1580)

II—Virtue and Happiness

<sup>3</sup> If you can be well without Health, you may be happy without Virtue.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 2745. (1732) Virtue and Happiness are but two names for the same Thing.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5363.

Virtue and Happiness are Mother and Daughter.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5364.

<sup>4</sup> Nor can you suppose that anyone is happy but the man who is wise and good. (Neve putes alium sapiente bonoque beatum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 16, l. 20. (20 B.C.) Without virtue happiness cannot be.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings, xiv, 405. (1790)

<sup>5</sup> Through virtue lies the one and only road to a life of peace. (Tranquillae per virtutem patet unica vitae.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 364. (c. A.D. 120)

<sup>6</sup> It is in virtue that happiness consists; for virtue is the state of mind which tends to make the whole of life harmonious. (ἐν αὐτῇ τ' εἶναι τὴν εὐδαιμονίαν, ἃτ' οὕση ψυχῇ πεποιημένη πρὸς τὴν ὁμολογίαν παντὸς τοῦ βίου.)

ZENO, Apothegm. (c. 275 B.C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Zeno. Bk. vii, sec. 89.

Virtue is by its very nature a thing for joy. (ὅτι ἡ τ' ἀρετὴ χαρτόν ἐστι φύσει καὶ ὁ ἔχων αὐτὴν αἰεὶ γέγηθε.)

PHILO, De Mutatione Nominum. Sec. 167. (c. A.D. 40)

The wise man is always happy, and every good thing is full of joy. (Semper sapiens beatus est. Atque etiam omne bonum laetabile est.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. v, ch. 15, sec. 43. (45 B.C.)

Neither can the virtues exist without happy life, nor happy life without the virtues. (Nec enim virtutes sine beata vita cohaerere possunt nec illa sine virtutibus.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. v, ch. 28, sec. 80. Cicero also quoted the proverb, "Nemo potest esse felix sine virtute" (No one can be happy without virtue).

Know then this truth (enough for man to know), "Virtue alone is happiness below."

POPE, An Essay on Man. Epis. iv, l. 309. (1732) The last line quoted by CRABBE, The Borough. Letter xvi. (1810)

You may be more happy than Princes, if you will be more virtuous.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1738.

'Tis virtue makes the bliss, where'er we dwell.

COLLINS, Persian Eclogues. No. i, l. 6. (a. 1759)

BE GOOD AND YOU WILL BE HAPPY, see under GOODNESS.

III—Virtue Its Own Reward

<sup>7</sup> Ipsa sui pretium virtus sibi, that Virtue is her own reward, is but a cold principle, and not able to maintain our variable resolutions in a constant and settled way of goodness.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. i, sec. 47. (1643)

If virtue were its own reward, it would no longer be a human quality, but supernatural. (Si la vertu se suffisait à elle-même, elle ne serait plus une qualité humaine, mais surnaturelle.)

VAUVENARGUES, Réflexions. No. 587. (1746)

To propose a reward for virtue is to render virtue impossible.

CARLYLE, Miscellanies (1857), i, 89. (1828)

<sup>1</sup> Duty is its own reward. (Officii fructus sit ipsum officium.)

CICERO, De Finibus. Bk. ii, sec. 73. (c. 45 B. C.)
Virtue is its own reward. (Pretium sibi virtus.)

OVID, Tristia. Bk. v, epis. 14, l. 31. (c. A. D. 11)
Justice and each of the other virtues is its own reward. (δικαιοσύνη καὶ ἐκάστη τῶν ἄλλων ἀρετῶν ἐαυτῆς ἐστὶ γέρας.)

PHILO, De Specialibus Legibus. Bk. ii, sec. 259. (c. A. D. 40)
Philo's statement is implicit in the common Stoic aphorism that virtue is happiness in itself (ἀταρκὴς πρὸς εὐδαιμονίαν, and αὐτὴ δι' αὐτὴν αἰρετός). SERVIUS (ARNIM, Stoicorum Veterum Fragmenta, iii, 45) has an exact parallel: "Stoici dicunt virtutem esse pro praemio si nulla sint praemia."

Do you ask what it is that I seek from virtue? Only herself. For she offers nothing better—she herself is her own reward. (Interrogas, quid petam ex virtute? Ipsam. Nihil enim habet melius, ipsa pretium sui.)

SENECA, De Vita Beata. Ch. 9, sec. 4. (c. A. D. 58)
The reward of all virtue is in itself. (Virtutum omnium pretium in ipsis est.)

SENECA, Ad Lucilium. Epis. lxxxi, sec. 19. (c. A. D. 64)
Quoted by MONTAIGNE, ii, 16.

Virtue herself is her own fairest reward. (Ipsa quidem virtus sibimet pulcherrima merces.)

SILIUS ITALICUS, Punica. Bk. xiii, l. 663. (c. A. D. 85)

Virtue is its own reward. (Ipsa quidem Virtus pretium sibi.)

CLAUDIAN, Panegyricus Dictus Manlio Theodoro Consuli, l. 1. (A. D. 399)

To follow Virtue, as its own reward.

DRYDEN, Tyrannic Love. Act ii, sc. 1. (1669)
Virtue is its own reward.

The only reward of virtue is virtue.

EMERSON, Essays: Friendship. (1841)

Virtue is its own disappointment.

PHILIP MOELLER, Madame Sand. Act i. (1917)
Virtue is its own reward, but have you ever realized what a damned poor reward it may be?

PERCIVAL WILDE, Inquest, p. 133. (1940)

If virtue is its own reward, who blames man for wandering farther afield?

Meditations in Wall Street, p. 145. (1940)

<sup>2</sup> Virtue glories not in the spoil, but in the victory.

DEKKER AND WEBSTER, Northward Hoe. Act v. (1607)

<sup>3</sup> Not among many thousands will you find one man who considers virtue its own reward. (Nec facile invenias multis in milibus unum, | virtutem pretium qui putet esse sui.)

OVID, Ex Ponto. Bk. ii, epis. 3, l. 11. (A. D. 13)
Who would embrace virtue if you stripped her of her rewards? (Quis enim virtutem amplectitur ipsam, | praemia si tollas?)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 141. (c. A. D. 120)

<sup>4</sup> In your opinion virtue requires no reward and is to be sought for itself. (Iudice te mercede caret per seque petenda est.)

OVID, Ex Ponto. Bk. ii, epis. 3, l. 35 (A. D. 13)
Virtue will not be followed except for her own sake. (La vertu ne veult estre suivie que pour elle mesme.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 1. (1580)

O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow Virtue ev'n for Virtue's sake.

POPE, The Temple of Fame, l. 364. (1711)

<sup>5</sup> Virtue is the highest reward. Virtue truly goes before all things. (Virtus praemium est optimum; | virtus omnibus rebus anteit profecto.)

Honor is the reward of virtue. (Honor est praemium virtutis.)

CICERO, Philippicae. No. iv, sec. 4. (44 B. C.)
Either virtue is an empty name, or the wise man rightly seeks it as his glory and reward. (Aut virtus nomen inane est, | aut decus et pretium recte petit experiens vir.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 17, l. 41. (20 B. C.)

Blessing ever waits on virtuous deeds,

And though a late, a sure reward succeeds.

CONGREVE, Mourning Bride. Act v, sc. 12. (1697)
<sup>6</sup> Virtue has its due rewards. (Sua praemia laudi.)

VERGIL, Aeneid. Bk. i, l. 461. (19 B. C.)

Right returns to right. (Droit à droit revient.)

JEAN DE BOVES, De Baret et de Haimet, l. 393. (c. 1250)
See MONTAIGLON, iv, 105.

<sup>7</sup> Virtue is worth seeking for its own sake, and not from hope or fear or any external motive. (τ' ἀρετὴν . . . αὐτὴν δι' αὐτὴν εἶναι αἰρετὴν, οὐ διὰ τινα φόβον ἢ ἐλπίδα ἢ τι τῶν ἑξωθεν.)

ZENO, Apothegm. (c. 275 B. C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Zeno. Bk. vii, sec. 89.

VISION

See also Ghost

<sup>8</sup> Perfect blessedness, which consists in a vision of God. (Beatitudinem perfectam, quae in Dei visione consistit.)

ST. THOMAS AQUINAS, Summa Theologiae. (1265) Hence "beatific vision."

<sup>9</sup> What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth? (Quod est proverbium istud vobis in terra Israel? dicentium: In longum differuntur dies, et peribit omnis visio.)

Old Testament: Eschiel, xii, 22. (c. 590 B. C.)

Where there is no vision, the people perish. (Cum prophetia defecerit, dissipabitur populus.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxix, 18. (c. 350 B. C.)
Our revels now are ended. These our actors, . . .
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision, . . .
Leave not a rack behind.

SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest, iv, 1, 148. (1611)
1 That which destroyeth a vision is the veil over it.

PTAH-HOTEP, Instruction. No. 23. (c. 3550
B. C.) Prisse Papyrus. Gunn, tr.

2 I am sick of visions and systems, that shove one another aside, and come over again, like the figures in a moving picture.

HORACE WALPOLE, Letter to George Montague,
21 Nov., 1765.

VOCATION

7 Each man has his own vocation. The Talent is the call.

R.W. EMERSON, Essays: Spiritual Laws. (1841)
The test of a vocation is the love of the drudgery it involves.

L. P. SMITH, Afterthoughts. (1931)

8 Labor every man in his vocation. (Trauaillez chascun en sa vocation.)

RABELAIS, Gargantua. Bk. i, ch. 45. (1534)

It is said, labour in thy vocation.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI, iv, 2, 17. (1590)

'Tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV, i, 2, 116. (1597)

VOICE

9 Being in the right does not depend on having a loud voice.

CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 381. (1938) A Chinese proverb.

10 In Pilates vois he gan to crye.

CHAUCER, The Miller's Prologue, l. 16. (c.

VOLCANO

15 As I sat opposite the Treasury Bench, the Ministers reminded me of those marine landscapes not unusual on the coasts of South America. You behold a range of exhausted volcanoes.

DISRAELI, Speech, Manchester, 3 April, 1872.

N. A. DE SALVANDY, Remark, to the Duke of Orleans, at a fête to the King of Naples, 31 May, 1830. See under DANCING.

I feel as if we were taking tea on the slope of a volcano.

VOMIT

<sup>2</sup> As a drunken man staggereth in his vomit. (Sicut errat ebrius et vomens.)

Old Testament: Isaiah, xix, 14. (c. 725 B. C.)

A dog returneth to his vomit. (κύων ἐπιστρέφας ἐπὶ τὸ ἴδιον ἐξέπαυα.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxvi, 11. (c. 350 B. C.) Also New Testament: II Peter, ii, 22, of which the Vulgate is, "Canis reversus ad suum vomitum," and which Wyclif renders, "As a dogge that turneth agen to his spuynge." A Greek proverb, being applied, in Greek literature, to those who return to their evil ways after a seeming reformation. Perhaps the oldest of all dog proverbs. It is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, v, 13.

He is the hound, shame is to seyn,

That to his casting goth ageyn.

(C'est le mastins qui gloutement Retourne a son vomissement.)

JEAN DE MEUNG, Roman de la Rose, l. 11967.

<sup>9</sup> Vote early and vote often.

JOHN VAN BUREN, Advice to Voters. (1836)

John Van Buren was a New York lawyer and politician, a son of Martin Van Buren. See DEVENS, Our First Century, p. 263.

"Vote early and vote often," the advice openly displayed on the election banners in one of our northern cities.

W. P. MILES, of South Carolina, Speech, House of Representatives, 31 March, 1858.

Be sure and vote at least once at all elections.

ARTEMUS WARD, Fourth of July Oration. (1859)

<sup>10</sup> Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish I give my heart and my hand to this vote.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Eulogy, upon John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, 2 August, 1826. Webster introduced this as a speech by Adams in favor of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, deriving it from the record of a conversation between Adams and Jonathan Sewall, in 1774, in which Adams said, "Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish with my country, was my unalterable determination."

VULGARITY

<sup>5</sup> A thing is not vulgar merely because it is common.

HAZLITT, Table-Talk: On Vulgarity. (1821)

<sup>6</sup> If we can't be moral, at least we can avoid being vulgar.

LANGDON MITCHELL, The New York Idea. Act ii. (1906)

<sup>7</sup> No medicine can cure vulgarity. (Man jên wu yao i.)

WILLIAM SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1543. (1875)

<sup>8</sup> Vulgarity is setting store by "the things that are seen."

LADY MORGAN (née SYDNEY OWENSON), Diary, 12 Sept., 1818.

Vulgarity is simply the conduct of other people

OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband. Act iii. (1895)

<sup>9</sup> It's worse than wicked my dear, it's vulgar UNKNOWN, Punch Almanack, 1876.

"The Discobolus is out here because he is vulgar—

He has neither vest nor pants with which to cover his limbs;

I, sir, am a person of the most respectable connections—

My brother-in-law is haberdasher to Mr. Spurgeon."

O God! O Montreal!

SAMUEL BUTLER, A Psalm of Montreal. (1875)
Written after a visit to the Montreal Museum of Natural History, where he found a plaster cast of the Discobolus gathering dust in a lumber-room because, as the custodian explained, it was rather vulgar.

WAGES

<sup>11</sup> "A fair day's wages for a fair day's work": it is as just a demand as Governed men ever made of Governing.

CARLYLE, Past and Present. Bk. i, ch. 3. (1843)
A fair day's wages for a fair day's work is ever my partner's motto.

DICKENS, Our Mutual Friend. Bk. i, ch. 13. (1865)

Instead of the conservative motto, "A fair day's wages for a fair day's work," we must inscribe on our banner the revolutionary watchword, "Abolition of the wage system."

I.W.W. Platform: Preamble. Adopted at Chicago, June, 1905.

<sup>12</sup> A living wage.

SIR ANDREW CLARKE, coining the phrase in 1892.
See Westminster Gazette, 24 Nov., 1900, p. 10/1.

A living wage includes not only decent maintenance for the present but also a reasonable provision for such future needs as sickness, invalidity, and old age.

Pastoral Letter, Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of the U.S., 22 Feb., 1920.

No business which depends for existence on paying less than living wages to its workers has any right to continue in this country.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, public statement, 16 June, 1933.

1 It is but a truism that labor is most productive where its wages are largest.

HENRY GEORGE, Progress and Poverty. Ch. 9. (1879)

2 Be content with your wages. (ἀρκείσθε τοῖς ὀψωνίοις ὑμῶν.)

New Testament: Luke, iii, 14. (c. A. D. 65) The Vulgate is, "Contenti estote stipendiis vestris."

3 The wages of sin is death. (τὰ γὰρ ὀψώνια τῆς ἁμαρτίας θάνατος.)

'Tis a principle of war that when you can use the lightning 'tis better than cannon.

NAPOLEON I, Sayings of Napoleon. (c. 1812)

War is a singular art. I have fought sixty battles, and I learned nothing but what I knew when I fought the first.

NAPOLEON I, to Gaspard Gourgaud, at St. Helena.

You must not fight too often with one enemy, or you will teach him all your art of war.

NAPOLEON I. As quoted by EMERSON, Representative Men: Napoleon.

4
Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword. (Non transibis per me, alioquin armatus occurram tibi.)

Old Testament: Numbers, xx, 18. (c. 550 B. C.)

You may not pass.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus, v, 2, 5. (1607)

They shall not pass! (Ils ne passeront pas!)

GENERAL HENRI PHILIPPE PÉTAIN (?), Ordre du Jour, issued to General Castelnau during the battle of Verdun, Feb., 1916. See N.Y. Times, 6 May, 1917. The phrase, like another credited to Pétain, "On les aura!" (We'll get them!), became at once a slogan for the French nation. It has been asserted by friends of General Robert Nivelle, who succeeded Pétain in command at Verdun and saved it by the capture of Douaumont and other forts, that he and not Pétain originated "Ils ne passeront pas." (Oct.-Dec., 1916)

The Hun is either always at your throat or at your feet.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, to the U.S. Congress, 19 May, 1943. Quoted as a saying.

5
To make war upon those who trade with us is like setting a bulldog upon a customer at the shop-door.

THOMAS PAINE, The Age of Reason. (1794)

War has but one thing certain, and that is to increase taxes.

WILLIAM HOOK, Sermon, Taunton, Mass., 1640.

There is many a boy here today who looks on war as all glory, but, boys, it is all hell.

GENERAL WILLIAM TECUMSEH SHERMAN, Ad- dress, before a Grand Army of the Republic convention at Columbus, Ohio, 11 Aug., 1880.

See LEWIS, Sherman, Fighting Prophet. In an address before the graduating class of the Michigan Military Academy, 19 June, 1879, Sherman is alleged to have said, "I am sick and tired of war. Its glory is all moonshine. . . . War is hell," but this has never been authenticated, and Sherman himself could not remember ever having used the phrase. Brigadier-General Henry J. O'Reilly, in The Outlook for 28 Oct., 1931, asserts that what Sherman really said was "War is hell when you're getting licked"; in his syndicated column The Totem Pole for 30 Oct., 1941, H. Allen Smith states, on the authority of James Street, Mississippi-born story writer, that in an old book called Jackson Jewels and Jackson Today—the Jackson referred to being Jackson, Miss.—the assertion is made that Sherman, while watching his army cross the Pearl river at Jackson, in 1863, saw one of the supply wagons upset, and, the account continues, "He stared at the mess a full minute, shook his head slowly from side to side, and then said, 'War is hell.'" Various other persons have claimed that they heard the phrase spoken by Sherman at one place or another, but no real evidence in any of these cases has ever been produced. In his Memoirs, vol. ii, p. 126 (1875), Sherman wrote, "War is cruelty, and you cannot refine it," but nowhere does he say, "War is hell."

III—War and Peace

1 None can esteeme or knowe what peace can be, Vnlesse he prouued haue, what warre is first. (Non conosce la pace, e non l'estima Chi prouato non ha la guerra prima.)

ARIOSTO, Orlando Furioso. (1532) As quoted by FLORIO, Firste Fruiles, fo. 44.

2 War must be for the sake of peace. (πόλεμον μὲν εἰρήνης χάριν.)

ARISTOTLE, Politics. Bk. vii, ch. 13, sec. 8. (c. 330 B. C.)

War should be undertaken in such a way as to show that the only object is peace. (Bellum autem ita suscipiatur, ut nihil aliud nisi pax quaesita videatur.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 23, sec. 80. (c. 45 B. C.)

The only excuse for war is that we may live unharmed in peace. (Quare suscipienda quidem bella sunt ob eam causam, ut sine iniuria in pace vivatur.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 11, sec. 35.

Wise men wage war only for the sake of peace. (Sapientes pacis causa bellum gerunt.)

SALLUST, Ad Caesarem Senem. Ch. 6. (c. 45 B. C.)

War is undertaken for the sake of peace, which is its only lawful end and purpose.

JAMES KENT, Commentaries on American Law. Ch. 1. (1826)

The object of war is peace.

HENRY M. WRISTON, Prepare for Peace. (1941) Opening sentence.

3 Most people believe the achievements of war more important than those of peace, but this is a mistake. (Cum plerique arbitrentur res bellicas maiores esse quam urbanas, minuenda est haec opinio.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 22, sec. 74. (c. 45 B. C.)

Fame may be won in peace as well as in war. (Vel pace vel bello clarum fieri licet.)

SALLUST, Bellum Catilinae. Ch. 3, sec. 1. (c. 41 B. C.)

Peace hath her victories,

No less renown'd than war.

JOHN MILTON, Sonnets: To the Lord General Cromwell. (1652) Frequently quoted.

The real and lasting victories are those of peace, and not of war.

COLONEL HENRY (LIGHT-HORSE HARRY) LEE, Resolutions Adopted by the Congress on the Death of Washington, 19 Dec., 1799. Concluding words of the resolutions, which are often erroneously credited to John Marshall, because he introduced them in the House of Representatives, read them, and moved their adoption. They were, however, written by Lee, with perhaps some suggestions from Marshall. See Journal of the House of Representatives, 6 Cong., 1 sess., p. 45; Annals of Congress, 6 Cong., 1 sess., col. 204. Marshall, in his Life of Washington (vol. v, p. 765, footnote), states that the resolutions were prepared by Lee, and in the text quotes them, probably from memory, giving the last clause as "first in the hearts of his fellow citizens." On 26 Dec., 1799, Lee delivered a memorial oration on Washington at Philadelphia, and repeated the phrase, which was already becoming famous. For full discussion, see STEVENSON, Famous Single Poems Rev. ed., ch. 19.

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. iii, sec. 44. (c. A. D. 116)

As war, in some sort, may be said to be a rav-isher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a great maker of cuckolds. . . . The wars for my money.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus, iv, 5, 243. (1607)

Peace to corrupt no less than war to waste.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. xi, l. 780. (1667)

WARE

3 Greet prees at market maketh deere ware.

CHAUCER, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 522. (c. 1386)

4 Good chaffer cannot want a chapman.

COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Marchand. (1611)

Good ware will never want a chapman.

6 Good wares easily find a buyer. (Proba mers facile emptorem reperit.)

PLAUTUS, Poenulus, l. 342. (c. 194 B. C.)

Ware that doth please is halfe sold. (Chose qui plait est à demy vendue.)

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Chose. (1611)

The Italian form is, "Mercanzia chi piace è mezza venduta."

Good ware makes quick markets.

NICHOLAS BRETON, Crossing of Proverbs. (1616)

Pleasing ware is half sold.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 15. (1640)

Good ware will off.

WILLIAM ROBERTSON, Phraseologia Generalis, p. 677. (1681) The Dutch say, "Goede waar prijst zichzelf" (Good ware sells itself)

Lik'd gear is half bought.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 235. (1721)

When Ware is lik'd, it is half sold.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5617. (1732)

WARM

7 As long as I am warm let them laugh [who will]. (Ándeme yo caliente, y ríase la gente.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 50. (1615)

8 As warm as wool.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 286. (1639)

FRANCK, Northern Memoirs, p. 163. (1658)

L'ESTRANGE, tr., Aesop, p. 411. (1692)

As warm as a mouse in a churn.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 290. (1678)

It was as warm as toast.

NICHOLAS BLAKE, The Corpse in the Snowman, p. 34. (1941)

9 Hee warmes himselfe too neer that burnes himselfe.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Brusler. (1611)

He warms too near that burns.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. (1640)

10 The scent grows warm.

JOHN GAY, Rural Sports, Canto ii, l. 68. (1713)

He's warm. He's precious warm. He's close.

DICKENS, Our Mutual Friend. Bk. iii, ch. 6. (1865)

11 He that is warm thinks all so.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 85. (1640)

12 The borough will be kept warm for the young gentleman.

JERROLD, The History of St. Giles. Ch. 6. (1845)

Keep the seat warm till the eldest son came of age.

ELIZABETH GASKELL, Ruth. Ch. 21. (1853)

13 I will make the country too warm for him to remain in.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, Letter. (1793) In Writings (1891), xii, 380.

The bride would make things warm for him.

MAX ADLER (CHARLES HEBER CLARK), Out of the Hurlyburly. Ch. 15. (1874)

WARNING

14 Warned folks may live.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 202. (1639)

See also under THREAT.

15 A wyse man will receaue warnynge, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face.

MILES COVERDALE, tr., Old Testament: Prov-erbs, x, 8. (1535) See FOOLS and WISE MEN

16 Scarbrough warnyng I had (quoth he).

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 11. (1645)

No warning at all.

The true man for giving Scarborough warning—first knock you down, then bid you stand.

WALTER SCOTT, Redgauntlet. Ch. 19. (1832)

The origin of the saying rests on the statement that in 1557 Thomas Stafford entered and took possession of Scarborough Castle before the townsmen were aware of his approach.

E. M. WRIGHT, Rustic Speech, p. 189. (1913)

17 Ware that geare.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1546)

Ware Skins, quoth Grubber, when he flung the louse into the fire.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 257. (1678)

Ware Skins, quoth Grub, when he flung a Louse in the Fire.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5420. (1732)

1 He that will not be warned by his own father, he shall be warned by his stepfather.

HILLS, Common-place Book, p. 128. (c. 1430)

2 Do thou lay it to heart. (σὺ δ' ἐνὶ φρεσὶ βάλλεο σῆσιν.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. xvi, l. 444. (c. 850 B. C.) A warning frequently repeated. Hesiod also uses it, as in Works and Days, l. 107.

3 He was slain that had warning, not he that took it.

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs, p. 3. (1659)

4 He who warns aids. (Qui monet quasi adiuvat.)

PLAUTUS, Curculio, l. 459. (c. 200 B. C.) Quoted as a proverb.

To sound warnings let prudence lend an ear. (Utilibus monitis prudens accomodet aurem.)

CATO (?), Collectio Monostichorum, l. 1. (c. 175 B. C.) See Minor Latin Poets, Loeb, p. 624.

5 Stop—Look—Listen!

RALPH R. UPTON, Warning Slogan. Upton devised this in 1912, when he was safety lecturer for the Puget Sound Power Company, Seattle, Wash., to replace the older sign at railroad crossings, "Look Out for the Engine," as used in New England, or "Look Out for the Locomotive," as used in the Middle West. Robert Frost is said to have brought "Stop, look, listen" to New England with him from his native California.

II—Forewarned, Forearmed

6 Cassi[o]dorus seith: "the garnison is stronger whan it is longe tyme avysed."

CHAUCER, Tale of Melibeus, Sec. 35. (c. 1387)

7 Forewarned, forearmed. (Praemonitus, praemunitus.)

ALFRED HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 335. Citing a proverb of unknown date. See also BLAND, Proverbs, i, 280. There are two similar Latin proverbs, "Praevisum est levius quod fuit ante malum" (The evil is lessened when it is seen beforehand), and "Praevisus ante mollior ictus venit" (The blow falls more lightly when it is anticipated). There are many English variations: "Good take heed doth surely speed," "Good watch prevents misfortune," "The candle which goes before is better than the one which comes after," "A danger foreseen is half avoided," etc. etc. The English phrase too frequently quoted to need extended citation.

By his fore-warning, thou hadst bene fore-armed.

ROBERT GREENE, Works, iv, 154. (1587)

I will arm me, being thus forwarn'd.

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI, iv, 1, 113. (1591)

Forewarned, forearmed; who threatens his enemy, Lends him a sword to guard himself withal.

UNKNOWN, Arden of Feversham. Act i. (1592)

I now knew the ground which I stood upon; and forewarned was being forearmed.

MARRYAT, Peter Simple. Ch. 54. (1834)

She was forewarned and forearmed.

JAMES PAYN, Thicker than Water. Ch. 12. (1883)

The French say, "Qui est averti, est muni"

8 He that is warned ys half armed.

HILLS, Common-place Book, p. 132. (a. 1530)

"Once warn[e]d, half-arm'd" folk say.

JOHN REDFORD, Wit and Science, l. 1021. (c. 1530)

Halfe warnd halfe armde.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 6. (1546)

CAMDEN, p. 323; HOWELL, p. 8.

A man prepared has half-fought the battle. (Hombre apercebido, medio combatido.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 17. (1615)

Shelton renders it, "He that is warned is half armed." The Italians say, "Uomo avertito, mezzo munito."

9 Once warned twice armed.

THOMAS HOWELL, H. His Devises, p. 15. (1581)

10 Warnde of my foe, I shunne my foe.

TIMOTHY KENDALL, Flowers of Epigrammes, p. 62. (1577)

11 Am I a man unable to look out, when I've been forewarned? (Egon ut cavere nequeam, cui praedicatur?)

PLAUTUS, Pseudolus, l. 516. (c. 195 B. C.)

Knowing, I'll be on my guard. (Sciens cavebo.)

TERENCE, Adelphoe, l. 711. (160 B. C.)

A certain seer warned Caesar to be on his guard against a great peril on the day of the month of March which the Romans call the Ides [the 15th]; and when that day had come and Caesar was on his way to the senate-house, he greeted the seer with a jest and said: "Well, the Ides of March are come," and the seer said to him softly: "Aye, they are come, but they are not gone." (καὶ πάρεσιν, ἀλλ' οὐ παρεληλυθασί.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Caesar. Ch. 63, sec. 3. (c. A. D. 110)

Beware the ides of March.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar, i, 2, 23. (1599)

Caesar: The ides of March are come.

Soothsayer: Ay, Caesar; but not gone.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar, iii, 1, 1.

WASHING

12 That willn't wash, Miss.

CHARLOTTE BRONTË, Shirley. Ch. 18. (1849)

Pluck. . . . That's the only thing after all that'll wash.

THOMAS HUGHES, Tom Brown's School Days. Bk. ii, ch. 2. (1857)

The defect of the argument is that it will neither wear nor wash.

LORD ACTON, Letter to Mary Gladstone. (1881)

13 All will come out in the washing. (Todo saldrá en la colada.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. i, ch. 20, 22; ii, 36. (1605) A similar expression occurs in i, 37, "Al freir de los huevos lo verá" (It will be seen in the frying of the eggs), that is, which of the eggs are good.

It all goes into the laundry,
But it never comes out in the wash.

RUDYARD KIPLING, Stellenbosh. (1881)

Your premises won't come out on the wash.

O. HENRY, A Little Local Color. (1910)

It'll all come out in the wash no doubt.

J. J. CONNINGTON, No Past Is Dead, p. 178. (1942)

We have, As learned Authours utter, wash'd a Tile.

UNKNOWN, Two Noble Kinsmen, iii, 5, 41. (1612) See also under LABOR LOST.

3
Home, and, being washing-day, dined upon cold meat.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 4 April, 1666.

They that wash Monday got all the week to dry,

They that wash Tuesday are pretty near by,

They that wash Wednesday make a good housewife.

They that wash Thursday must wash for their life,

They that wash Friday must wash in need,

They that wash Saturday are sluts in deed.

ROBERT HUNT, Popular Romances of the West of England, p. 430. (1865) There are many variants.

4
Often to the water often to the tatter.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 347. (1678)

Linnen often to Water, soon to tatter.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 378. (1732)

5
All the water in the sea cannot wash him.

TORRIANO, Piazza Unversule, p. 143. (1666)

All the Water in the Sea cannot wash out this Stain.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 557. (1732)

Reminiscent of SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth, v, 1.

57, "All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand."

6
Prithee let me intreat thee now to drink before thou wash; our fathers that were wise, were wont to say 'twas wholesome for the eyes.

GEORGE WITHER, Abuses Stript and Whipt. Bk. i, sat. 1. (1613)

Our fathers, who were wondrous wise, did wash their throats before they wash'd their eyes.

It is written upon the cucumber leaf that he who watches during the night sleeps during the day.

BURCKHARDT, Arabic Proverbs. No. 660. (1817)

He who passes the night in revelry is unfit for business next day. "It is written on the cucumber leaf" means that even the meanest people can read it, since cucumbers are very cheap and common in Egypt.

Pasiphae, p. 222. (1576)

Still, when she slept, he kept both watch and ward.

EDMUND SPENSER, The Faerie Queene. Bk. i, canto iii, st. 9. (1596)

It has often been supposed that in this phrase watch refers to service by night and ward to service by day, but this seems to be merely an unsupported inference from the etymology.

ACCIUS, Oenomaus. Frag. 508 L. (c. 140 B.C.)

A continual dripping, 'tis said, will wear a hollow even in a stone. (ἐκ θαμινᾶς ῥαδάμιγγος, ὅπως λόγος, αἰὲς ἰστέας | χεῖ λῖθος ἐς ῥωχμὸν κοιλαίνεται.)

BION, Persistence. Frag. 15. (c. 120 B.C.)

The fall of drippings hollows a stone (Stilicidi casus lapidem cavat), the curved ploughshare of iron imperceptibly dwindles away in the fields, and the stony pavement of the roads is rubbed away by men's feet.

LUCRETIUS, De Rerum Natura. Bk. i, l. 313. (c. 45 B.C.) Quoted by MONTAIGNE, iii, 9.

Even drops of water falling upon a stone in the long run wear a way through the stone. (Etiam guttas in saxa cadentis | umoris longo in spatio pertundere saxa.)

LUCRETIUS, De Rerum Natura. Bk. iv, l. 1286

Drops of water oft wear down the flint. (Parvo saepe liquore silex.)

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. ii, eleg. 25, l. 16. (c. 24 B.C.)

Drops of water make hollows in rocks, steel and bronze are worn away by the touch of hands. (σταγόνες μὲν γὰρ ὕδατος πέτρας κοιλαίνουσι.)

Little droppen thurleth thene ulint [flint] thet ofte ualleth theron.

Ancren Riwe (Morton), p. 220. (a. 1225)

So ofte falleth the lethy water on the harde rocke, til it have thorow persed it.

THOMAS USK, The Testament of Love. (c. 1387) In SKEAT, Chaucer, vii, 135.

How well the stone is myned and holowed by contynuell droppynge of water.

WILLIAM CAXTON, tr., Jason, p. 20. (c. 1477)

Constant dripping wears away the stone. (Stillidium perpetuum saxum excavat.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, iii, iii, 3. (1523) Another form is "Assidua stilla saxum excavat."

The soft drops of raine perce the hard Marble.

JOHN LYL, Euphues (Arber), p. 81. (1579)

The lyttle droppes of rayne pearceth hard marble, yron with often handling is worn to nothing.

JOHN LYL, Euphues, p. 127.

Hard stones are pearced with soft droppes, great Oakes hewen downe with many blowes, the stoniest heart mollyfied by continuall perswasions.

LYL, Euphues and His England, p. 337. (1580)

In time the flint is pierced with softest shower.

KYD, Spanish Tragedie. Act ii, sc. 1. (c. 1589)

The water which falls drop by drop

Pierces in time the hardest rock.

(L'eau qui tombe goutte à goutte Perce le plus dur rocher.)

QUINAULT, Atys. Act iv, sc. 5. (c. 1680)

Constant dripping wears away stones.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1758.

Constant dripping will wear away a stone.

DICKENS, Old Curiosity Shop. Ch. 7. (1841)

Constant dripping wears away a stone; constant flirtation saps the character.

<sup>2</sup> Soft and weak overcome hard and strong.

LAO-TSZE, Tao-teh-king. Sec. 36. (c. 550 B.C.)

Nothing on earth is so weak and yielding as water, but for breaking down the firm and strong it has no equal.

LAO-TSZE, Tao-teh-king. Sec. 78.

<sup>3</sup> The soft fetherbed breaketh the hard blade.

JOHN LYL, Euphues (Arber), p. 44. (1579)

Just as a feather-bed the flint doth break.

EDMUND GAYTON, Art of Longevity, p. 20. (1659)

As the English say, To break a flint upon a feather-bed.

TORRIANO, Piazza Universale, p. 123. (1666)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. i, l. 473. (c. 1 B.C.)

"Only persevere," Ovid adds, "and you will overcome Penelope herself."

Iron is worn away, and flints are diminished by use. (Conteritur ferrum, silices tenuantur ab usu.)

OVID, Artis Amatoriae. Bk. iii, l. 91.

Stones are hollowed out by the constant dropping of water. (Caducis | percussu crebro saxa cavantur aquis.)

OVID, Ex Ponto. Bk. ii, epis. vii, l. 39. (A.D. 13)

Drops of water hollow out the stone, a ring is worn thin by use, the hooked plough is rubbed away by the soil's pressure. (Gutta cavat lapidem, consumitur anulus usu, | atteritur pressa vomer aduncus humo.)

OVID, Ex Ponto. Bk. iv, epis. x, l. 5. (A.D. 13)

The drop hollows out the stone not by strength, but by constant falling. (Gutta cavat lapidem non vi, sed saepe cadendo.)

UNKNOWN, Passionarius, i, 17. (c. 1050) HENDERSON, Latin Proverbs, p. 145.

It is a good wise verse, Gutta cavat lapidem non vi sed saepe cadendo; "The drop of rain maketh a hole in the stone, not by violence, but by oft falling."

HUGH LATIMER, Seventh Sermon Before Edward VI (Parker Soc.), p. 232. (1549)

The rolling wheele, that runneth often round,
The hardest steele in tract of time doth teare:
And drizzling drops, that often doe redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance weare.

Where the ryver is deepest, it runneth quietest.
STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. ii, p. 222. (1574) Pettie, tr.

Where the streame runneth smoothest, the water is deepest.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues (Arber), p. 287. (1580)
There is, as they say, no worse water than still water. (Mais il n'est, comme on dit, pire eau que l'eau qui dort.)

MOLIÈRE, Le Tartuffe. Act i, sc. 1, l. 24. (1664)
Quoting a French proverb. The Spaniards say, "Do va mas hondo el rio, hace menos ruido" (Where the river is deepest it makes the least noise); the Germans, "Stille Wasser sind tief"; the Dutch, "Stille waters hebben diepe gronden."

The stillest humours are always the worst.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 25. (1670)

<sup>10</sup> Shallow brooks murmur most, deep silent slide away.

SIDNEY, Arcadia: Thirsis and Dorus. (a. 1586)
Shallow waters mak maist din.

JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish, p. 254. (1678)
The shallowest brooks brawl the most.

C. H. SPURGEON, John Ploughman. Ch. 6. (1869)

IV—Water-Drinking

<sup>11</sup> When water chokes you, why go on drinking? (δταν τὸ ὕδωρ πνίγῃ, τί δεῖ ἐπιπίνειν;)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. vii, ch. 2, sec. 10. (c. 335 B.C.) Rackham translates this as, "When water chokes you, what are you to drink to wash it down?" Aristotle quotes the phrase as a proverb, and applies it to a man who keeps on doing what he knows he should not do. ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, i, 8, gives the Latin as "Cum aqua fauces strangulet, quid iam opus est bibere?"

<sup>1</sup> Let no one say, "I will not drink of this water."
(Nadie diga, desta agua no beberé.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 55. (1615)
Let none say, I will not drink water.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 312. (1640)
Don't say, I'll never drink of this water, how dirty soever it be.

SAMUEL PALMER, Proverbs, p. 236. (1710)
Tho' thy Water be never so muddy, don't say,
I'll never drink of it.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5016. (1732)

<sup>2</sup> Water, water, everywhere, Nor any drop to drink.

COLERIDGE, Ancient Mariner. Pt. ii. (1798)

<sup>3</sup> Water drinking can never produce art. (ὕδωρ δὲ πίνων οὐδὲν ἂν τέκοις σοφόν.)

CRATINUS, Fragment. (c. 450 B.C.) A similar Greek proverb is cited by Erasmus: "Never a dramatic poet who drank water." The French say, "Tous les méchants sont buveurs d'eau; c'est bien prouvé par le déluge" (All wicked persons are water-drinkers; that is clearly proved by the deluge).

No song can live which was written on potations of water. (Nec vivere carmina possunt. | quae scribuntur aquae potioribus.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 19, l. 2. (20 B.C.)
Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, vi, 2, who gives a similar one (iv, iii, 58), "Non est dithyrambus, si bibat aquam" (Nobody is a writer of dithyrambs if he drinks water).

Wine to the poet is a winged steed:
Those who drink water gain but little speed (οἶνος τοι χαρίεντι πέλει ταχὺς ἵππος δαιδῶ· ὕδωρ δὲ πίνων οὐδὲν ἂν τέκοις σοφόν.)

NICAENETUS, (Greek Anthology, xiii, 29.)
Water-drinkers bring forth nothing good.
(Aquam bibens nihil boni parias.)

ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, vi, 2. (1523)

<sup>4</sup> A falser water drinker there liueth not.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5 (1546)

<sup>5</sup> In sweet water there is a pleasure ungrudged by anyone. (Est in aqua dulci non invidiosa voluptas.)

OID, Ex Ponto. Bk. ii, epis. vii, l. 73. (A. D. 13)
The natural, temperate, and necessary beverage for the thirsty is water.

CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA, Paedagogus. Sec. 2.
(c. 190)

Drynke but myd the doke, and dyne but ones
[Drink but with the duck: drink only water].

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers the Plowman. Text
B, passus v, l. 75. (c. 1362)

Honest water which ne'er left man i' the mire
SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens, i, 2, 59. (1608)

Drink water, put the money in your pocket, and leave the dry-bellyach in the punch-bowl.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1734.
Those who drink but water will have no liquor to buy.

T. C. HALIBURTON, Wise Saws. Ch. 2. (1843)

Water is the only drink for a wise man.

H. D. THOREAU, Walden. Ch. 1. (1854)

Drinking water neither makes a man sick, nor in debt, nor his wife a widow.

H. G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 346. (1855)

<sup>6</sup> Water . . . doth very greatly deject the appetite, destroy the natural heat, and overthrow the strength of the stomach.

TOBIAS VENNER, Via Recta ad Vita Longam.
(1620)

Water is insipid, inodorous, colorless, and smooth.

EDMUND BURKE, On the Sublime and Beautiful. Ch. 4. (1756)

WATERLOO

<sup>7</sup> Every man meets his Waterloo at last.

WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech on John Brown,
1 Nov., 1859. Waterloo, Napoleon's last battle, 18 June, 1815; hence proverbially a decisive and final defeat.

This is my Waterloo.

BRONSON HOWARD, The Henrietta. Act iii. (1887)

We have not yet met our Waterloo, Watson, but this is our Marengo.

CONAN DOYLE, Abbey Grange. (1905)

<sup>8</sup> Up, Guards, and at 'em!

DUKE OF WELLINGTON, at the battle of Waterloo, 18 June, 1815. As quoted by Captain Batty, in letter dated 22 June, 1815, and published in BOOTH, Battle of Waterloo.
According to Wellington's biographer, Sir Herbert Maxwell, what he really said was "Stand up, Guards," and this was confirmed by the Duke himself in a letter to J. W.
Croker, 14 March, 1852. See CROKER, Correspondence and Diaries, iii, 280: "What I must have said, and probably did say, was.
'Stand up, Guards!' and then gave the commanding officers the order to attack."

The battle of Waterloo was won here.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON, Remark, while watching a cricket match at Eton. (c. 1825) See FRASER, Words on Wellington, p. 138. Usually quoted, "The battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton."

WAVE

<sup>9</sup> The wilde wawes wol hir dryve

Unto the place, ther she shal arryve.

CHAUCER, Man of Law's Tale, l. 370. (c. 1386)
What the waves were always saying.

DICKENS, Dombey and Son. Ch. 16. (1848)

What are the wild waves saying,

Sister, the whole day long?

STEPHEN GLOVER, *What Are the Wild Waves
Saying?* (c. 1860)

<sup>10</sup> When one wave recedes, another follows
(Alio relinquente fluctu, alius exceptit.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. vi, No. 34.
(1523) Quoting Aristides.

The longest wave is quickly lost in the sea.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Plato. (1850)

WAX

Mere wax as yet, you fashion him at ease.
POPE, tr., Horace's Epistles, ii, 2, 9. (1717)
Wax to receive and marble to retain.
LORD BYRON, Beppo. Pt. xxxiv. (1817)
<sup>3</sup>
Soft wax will take any impression.
WILLIAM WALKER, Paroemiologia, p. 35. (1672)
<sup>4</sup>
Stopping the ears with wax. (κηρόν τοῖς ὠσιν ἐπαλείφει.)
UNKNOWN. A Greek proverb, referring to the action of Ulysses, who put wax in the ears of his crew so that they could not hear the song of the Sirens. Sometimes shortened to ἐν ὠσὶ κεψέλη (With wax in the ears).

WAY

- <sup>5</sup>
Such is the way of the world. (οὕτω τὸ τοῦ κοιμώδεται.)
ALCAEUS. Frag. 71. (c. 595 B. C.) A proverbial phrase which Alcaeus uses of friends who always came to dine when he could give them kid and pork, but stayed away when poverty overtook him. See EDMONDS, *Lyra
Graeca*, i, 365.

There is but one law in the world. The weakest goes to the wall.

J. A. FROUDE, Short Studies, i, 645. (1867)

In times of revolution and tumult the weak must go to the wall.

JAMES GAIRDNER, Intro. to Paston Letters, iv,

234. (1907) Various meanings have been read into the proverb. Bailey says it is "a compliment to the female sex" who were permitted to walk next the walls along the streets because that was the cleanest and safest place. See under WALL. LEAN, Collectanea, iv, 211, says, "I should be disposed to derive this proverb from the custom of our ancestors, when their beds stood at the side of the room, to put the youngest and feeblest of the family on the inside." Another explanation is that the proverb refers to the old church practice of compelling the strong to stand during the service, but providing benches along the wall for the old and weak.

Good is wealth if it be without sin.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom, xiii, 24.(c. 190 B.C.)

<sup>15</sup> Old is the proverb, yet will I repeat it: Men set most store by wealth, and of all things In this wide world it hath the greatest power. (πάλαι μὲν οὖν ὑμνήθην, ἀλλ' ὅμως ἐρῶ· τὰ χρήματ' ἀνθρώποισι τιμωτάτα δύναμιν τε πλείστην τῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἔχει.)

EURIPIDES, Phoenissae, l. 438. (c. 420 B.C.)

Wealth it is that finds out friends for men, And wields the greatest power among mankind. (τὰ χρήματ' ἀνθρώποισιν εὐρίσκειν φίλους δύναμιν τε πλείστην τῶν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἔχειν.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia, Sec. 497B. (c. A.D. 95) Plutarch says that he is quoting Euripides, but the first line is borrowed from SOPHOCLES. Fragments. Frag. 85 Nauck.

As wealth is power, so all power will infallibly draw wealth to itself by some means or other.

CAHIER, Six Mille Proverbes, p. 321. (1856)

Be it dry or be it wet,
The weather'll always pay its debt.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 18. (1875)

A modern variant is, "Whether it's cold or whether it's hot, We're going to have weather, whether or not."

We may achieve climate, but weather is thrust upon us.

O HENRY, A Fog in Santone. (1912)

<sup>5</sup> Some are weatherwise, some are otherwise.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1735.

He who is weather-wise is not otherwise.

CHEALES, Proverbial Folk-Lore, p. 18. (1875)

It is well known that "fools are weatherwise," and that "those that are weatherwise are rarely otherwise."

"Rain one day, shine the next."

<sup>7</sup> Weather meete to sette paddocks [frogs] abroode in.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 13. (1546)

From which appearance he augured that another fine week for ducks was approaching.

DICKENS, Old Curiosity Shop. Ch. 2. (1840)

<sup>8</sup> Change of weather is the discourse of fools.

JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs: Span.-Eng., p. 2. (1659) RAY, p. 28; FULLER, No. 1082.

And finds a changing clime an happy source
Of wise reflection and well-tim'd discourse.

WILLIAM COWPER, Conversation, l. 387. (1781)

To talk of the weather it's nothing but folly,
For when it rains on the hill the sun shines in the valley.

MICHAEL DENHAM, Proverbs, p. 17. (1846)

The Russians say, "Whoever wants to lie need only begin to talk about the weather." Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything about it.

<sup>10</sup> With winter dust and spring mud you will reap, Camillus, big harvests. (Hiberno pulvere verno luto grandia ferra, Camille, metes.)

MACROBIUS, Saturnalia, v, 20, 18. (c. A.D. 400)

Macrobius refers to this as "an old rustic saw" (Rusticum vetus canticum). The origin, perhaps, of the English, "A bushel (or peck) of March dust is worth a king's ransom."

<sup>11</sup> When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather today: for the sky is red and lowring.

New Testament: Matthew, xvi, 2-3. (c. A.D. 65)

The evening red, the morning gray.

Foreshewes a cleare and summers day.

LEWIS EVANS, Withals Dictionary, sig. N7. (1586)

The red evening and gray morning is the desire of the pilgrim. (Le rouge soir et brun matin Est le desir du pèlerin.)

GABRIEL MEURIER, Trésor des Sentences. (1590)

A variant is, "Rouge soir et blanc matin C'est la journée du pèlerin." The Italians have the same proverb, "Sera rossa e negro matino Allegra il pellegrino."

The evening red the morning gray presage a faire succeeding day.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Matin. (1611)

An evening red and a morning gray,

Are sure signs of a fair day.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 263. (1639)

Evening gray and morning red,

Send the poor shepherd home wet to his bed.

FORBY, Vocabulary of East Anglia, p. 416. (1830)

Red sky in the morning, rain in the afternoon, red sky at evening, fair weather.

DOOLITTLE, Chinese Vocabulary, II, 682. (1872)

An evening grey and a morning red
Will send the shepherd wet to bed.

RICHARD INWARDS, Weather Lore, p. 53. (1893)
Evening red and morning grey
Help the traveller on his way;
Evening grey and morning red
Bring down rain upon his head.

RICHARD INWARDS, Weather Lore, p. 54. There are many other variations of this proverbial jingle, several of which will be found in Inwards, as will innumerable other weather proverbs, too unimportant to be included here.

If the sun in red doth set,
The next day surely will be wet;
If the sun doth set in grey,
The next will be a rainy day.

WEB

<sup>6</sup>
Day by day she [Penelope] would weave at the great web, but by night would unravel it. (ἔνθα καὶ ἡματὶν μὲν ὑφάλεσκεν μέγαν ιστόν, | νύκτας δ' ἀλλύσκεν.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xxiv, l. 139. (c. 850 B.C.)

Penelope had told the impatient wooers that she would give them an answer as soon as she had woven a shroud for Laertes; then for three years, while they waited, she unravelled every night what she had woven during the day, but in the fourth year, one of her women betrayed her, and she was compelled to finish the web. ERASMUS, Adagia, i, iv, 42, cites the Latin proverb derived from the story, "Penelopes telam retexere" (To unravel the web of Penelope).

This will prove no other than a Penelope's web, a work to no purpose. (Penelopes tela.)

ERASMUS, Moriae Encomium. Sec. 91. (1511)

You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus, i, 3, 92. (1607)

He winds up his thoughts often, and as often unwinds them; Penelope's web thrives faster.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, Characters: A Melancholy Man. (1614)

Examples teach soonest. . . . The force of a hundred good sermons is lost by one enormity; so easy it is to weave Penelope's web.

THOMAS ADAMS, Sermons (1861), i, 459. (1629)

We should be forced to weave Penelope's web, unravel in the night what we spun in the day.

SWIFT, Faculties of the Mind. (1707)

How long shall we be constrained to weave Penelope's web?

JOHN WESLEY, Journal, 6 Sept., 1771.

WEILERISMS *

<sup>1</sup> "Pray, good folk, let us not step on each other," said the cock [to the horse].

DANIEL DEFOE, The Shortest Way with the Dissenters. (1702)

* A Wellerism is defined by the Oxford English Dictionary as a speech or expression typical of Sam Weller, of The Pickwick Papers. Specifically it is a maxim or epigram, with the addition of "as somebody said," or "quoth someone." In 1863, a Dutch periodical, Hel Leeskabineet, published a collection of proverbs from Pickwick called Samwelleriana, and "Wellerism" came into use shortly after that. The form, of course, was not original with Dickens, but is as old as literature. Quintilian refers to Wellerisms when he says (v, xi, 21), "Similar to these [fables] is that class of proverb which may be regarded as an abridged fable," and examples will be found cited here from Plato, Theocritus, Zenobius, and others. In fact, many commentators regard Wellerisms as direct descendants of the fables of Aesop: "What a dust I raise," said the fly on the wheel," for example. (See under FLY.) In addition to the few given here, many others will be found throughout the book under their appropriate subjects. For a full discussion of Wellerisms see ARCHER TAYLOR, The Proverb, p. 200, et seq.

<sup>2</sup> What the devil do you want with me, as the man said wen he see the ghost?

DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 10. (1836)

Out with it, as the father said to the child, wen he swallowed a farden.—Ibid., ch. 12.

There's nothin' so refreshin' as sleep, sir, as the servant-girl said afore she drunk the egg-cupful o' laudanum.—Ibid., ch. 16.

If you valley my precious life don't upset me, as the gen'l'm'n said to the driver wen they was a carryin' him to Tyburn.—Ibid., ch. 19.

Now, gen'l'm'n, fall on, as the English said to the French wen they fixed bagginets.—Ibid., ch. 19. I think he's the victim o' connubiality, as Blue Beard's domestic chaplain said, with a tear of pity, ven he buried him.—Ibid., ch. 20.

It's over, and can't be helped, and that's one consolation, as they always says in Turkey, ven they cuts the wrong man's head off.—Ibid., ch. 23. Business first, pleasure arterwards, as King Richard the Third said wen he stabbed the t'other king in the Tower, afore he smothered the babbies.—Ibid., ch. 25.

Vether it's worth goin' through so much to learn so little, as the charity-boy said ven he got to the end of the alphabet, is a matter o' taste.—Ibid., ch. 27.

"Severe weather, Sam," observed Mr. Pickwick.—"Fine time for them as is well wropped up, as the Polar Bear said to himself, ven he was practising his skating," replied Mr. Weller.—Ibid., ch. 30.

I'm pretty tough, that's vun consolation, as the wery old turkey remarked wen the farmer said he was afeard he should be obliged to kill him for the London market.—Ibid., ch. 33.

Hooroar for the principle, as the money-lender said ven he wouldn't renew the bill.—Ibid., ch. 35.

Avay with melinchooly, as the little boy said ven his school-missis died.—Ibid., ch. 44.

I only assisted natur', ma'am, as the doctor said to the boy's mother, arter he'd bled him to death.—Ibid., ch. 47.

It's days since that car went west.

J. J. CONNINGTON, Four Defences, p. 53. (1940)

When there's a war on, all that goes west.

AGATHA CHRISTIE, N or M?, p. 67. (1941)
"Gone West," as a euphemism for dying, or being destroyed, or passing out of existence, was particularly in vogue among the British during the First World War. It will be noted that its roots go back to ancient Egypt. In Elizabethan literature "To go west," meaning to end life, is said to have derived from the fact that the Tyburn place of execution was west of London.

<sup>1</sup> Westward the course of empire takes its way.

BISHOP GEORGE BERKELEY, On the Prospect of Planting Arts and Learning in America. (1725) At the time he wrote these verses, Bishop Berkeley was endeavoring to secure money to start a college in Bermuda, to train young Indians as missionaries to their fellow-tribesmen, but was unsuccessful. The line was misquoted, "Westward the star of empire takes its way," in the epigraph stamped on the back cover of the early editions of BANCROFT, History of the United States (1834), and it is still frequently so given.

JAMES HOWELL, Letters, ii, 666. (1659)

He who marries a widow will often have a dead man's head thrown in his dish.

NATHAN BAILEY, Dictionary: Widow. (1736)

It is always dangerous to marry a widow, because of the unpleasant comparisons which she may make.

JAMES PAYN, Canon's Ward. Ch. 27. (1884)

Never marry a widow unless her first husband was hanged.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 260. (1721)

"Lest she upbraid you with him, and sing you an old Scottish song: You will never be like our old good man."

To marry a widow, in slangy French, means to make a fortune; but it doesn't always work out that way. (Épouser une veuve, en bon français, signifie faire sa fortune: il n'opère pas toujours ce qu'il signifie.)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères: Des Biens de Fortune. (1688)

He that marries a widow and three children, marries four thieves.

UNKNOWN, The New Help to Discourse, p. 310. (1669) RAY, p. 51; FULLER, No. 2237.

He that marries a widow, and two daughters, has three back doors to his house.

<sup>1</sup> If your wife's beautiful, you'll not have her to yourself; if she's ugly, you'll pay for it dearly. (ἂν μὲν καλὴν, ἔξεις κοινὴν, ἂν δὲ αἰσχράν, ἔξεις ποινήν.)

ANTISTHENES, Apothegm. (c. 375 B.C.) See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, vi, 3. Quoted by BION (c. 250 B.C.) in slightly different form, "If you marry an ugly wife she will be your bane, if a beautiful one you will not keep her to yourself." See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, iv, 48. See also under BEAUTY.

He that marries a wife is happy for a month, but he that gets a fat benefice lives merrily all his life.

BAILEY, tr., Erasmus' Colloquies, p. 27. (1725)

<sup>2</sup> Honor your wives, for thus you enrich marriage.

Babylonian Talmud: Baba Metzia, fo. 59a. (c. 450)

If thy wife is small, bend down that thou mayst speak to her.

Babylonian Talmud: Baba Metzia, fo. 59a. A man should not think himself too superior to his wife to consult her. "If your wife is short, stoop to her" is the proverbial form.

<sup>3</sup> He who followeth the advice of his wife will fall into hell.

Babylonian Talmud: Baba Metzia, fo. 59a. (c. 450) The Welsh say, "The advice of a wife is worthless, but woe the man who does not take it."

Ah! gentle dames, it gars me greet,
To think how monie counsels sweet,
How monie lengthen'd, sage advices,
The husband frae the wife despises!

ROBERT BURNS, Tam O'Shanter. (1791)

Every man who is high up loves to think he has done it all himself; and the wife smiles, and lets it go at that. It's only our joke. Every woman knows that.

J. M. BARRIE, What Every Woman Knows. Act iv. (1908)

Babylonian Talmud: Jebamoth, fo. 63b. (c. 450) The key to the proverb is to be found in these two verses: "Whoso hath found [matza] a wife hath found good" (Prov. xviii, 22), and "I find [motzé] woman more bitter than death" (Eccles. vii, 26).

<sup>5</sup> Wives are young mens Mistresses; Companions for middle Age; and old Mens Nurses.

CAESAR'S WIFE MUST BE ABOVE SUSPICION, see under CAESAR.

<sup>7</sup> He that kisses his wife in the market-place shall have many teachers.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains, p. 323. (1605)

He that kisseth his wife in the market-place shall have enough to teach him.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 110. (1670)

He that kisses his wife at the market cross, will have many to teach him. Spoken when people are officiously instructing us in doing what we are about.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 173. (1721)

<sup>8</sup> An ugly wife and a lean piece of ground protect the house.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 382. (1938) A Chinese proverb.

A young wife should be but a shadow and echo in her house.

S. G. CHAMPION, Racial Proverbs, p. 447. A Japanese proverb. The Japanese also say, "Beat your wife on the wedding day, and your married life will be happy," and "Make your plans for the year at its beginning; correct your wife from the first day." The Russians say, "A wife may love a husband who never beats her, but she does not respect him," and "Beat your wife before dinner, and again before supper."

<sup>9</sup> Therefore seith Salomon, "an hous that is uncovered and droppinge, and a chydinge wyf. been lyke."

CHAUCER, The Persones Tale. Sec. 42. (c. 1389) A reeking house and a scawding wife will make yan weary of his life.

<sup>10</sup> Who-so buildeth his hous all of salwes [twigs] And pricketh his blinde hors over the falwes [fallow ground],

And suffreth his wife to go seken halwes [shrines of saints],

Is worthy to be hanged on the galwes!

CHAUCER, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 655. (c. 1388)

Who lets his wife go to euerie feaste,
And lets his horse drinke at euerie puddle,
Shall haue of his horse, a starke jadish beast,
And of his best wife, a twang and a huddle.

JOHN FLORIO, Second Frutes, p. 41. (1591)

Who lets his wife go to every feast, and his horse drink at every water, shall neither have good wife, nor good horse.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 436. (1640)

He that lets his wife drink of every cup, and his horse at every water, shall be sure to have neither of 'em good for any thing.

THOMAS D'URFEY, The Comical History of Don Quixote. Pt. iii, act iv, sc. 1. (1696)

Oft would he say, Who builds his house on sands,
Pricks his blind horse across the fallow lands,
Or lets his wife abroad with pilgrims roam,
Deserves a fool's-cap and long ears at home.

POPE, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 347. (1714)

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 33. (1721)

A variation of the French, "Une poule qui chante le coq, et une fille qui siffle, portent malheur dans la maison."

A whistling woman and a crowing hen.
Is fit for neither God nor men.

Notes and Queries, i, ii, 164. (1850)

A whistling wife and a crowing hen will fear the old lad [the devil] out of his den.

J. C. BRIDGE, Cheshire Proverbs, p. 28. (1917)

In the olden days, a woman who whistled was regarded as a witch, and a hen that crowed was promptly killed, a practice which is said still to prevail among the Chinese. The proverb is common to many languages. Two modern variants are, "A whistling wife and a crowing hen will come to God, but God knows when," and "Girls that whistle and hens that crow Will always have fun, wherever they go."

6 It is a sour reek [smoke] where the good wife dings [beats] the good man.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 186. (1721)

Kelly explains the origin of the proverb by telling the story of the man who, coming out of his house with tears on his cheeks, and being asked why he was weeping, said, "There's a sour reek in the house."

WINE

3 Wet now the lungs with wine. (τέγγε πνεύμονα οἶνον.)

ALCAEUS. Frag. 39, Bergk. (c. 595 B.C.) It was a belief of the ancients that liquids went to the lungs to moisten them, and then passed on into the stomach. See AULUS GELLIUS, xvii, 11.

Give wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. (Date vinum his, qui amaro sunt animo.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxxi, 6. (c. 350 B.C.) Drink wine in winter for cold, and in summer for heat.

H.G. BOHN, Handbook of Proverbs, p. 346. (1855)

4 What is stronger than wine foaming in the press?

ADRIAN, Teachings. Col. vi, l. 79. (c. 550 B.C.)

5 You have spoiled the wine by adding water. (ἀλώσας τὸν οἶνον ἐπιχέας ὕδωρ.)

ARISTUS, Cyclops. (c. 400 B.C.) As cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, ii, 96, with the Latin, "Perdidisti vinum, infusa aqua."

The wine when first poured in foams madly, but as soon as it is chastened by the sober deity of water, it forms a fair alliance, and produces a potion that is good and moderate.

PLATO, Laws. Bk. vi, sec. 773D. (c. 345 B.C.) As Plato said in reference to pure wine mixed with water, that an insane god [Dionysus] was made reasonable when chastised by another [Poseidon] who was sober.

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Old Men in Public Affairs. Sec. 791C. (c. A.D. 95)

Away with you, Water, destruction of wine. (Abite, lymphæ, vini perniciēs.)

Curses on him who first spoilt wholesome water by mixing wine therein! (Corruptitque bonas nectare primus aquas!)

PROPERTIUS, Elegies. Bk. ii, eleg. 33, l. 28. (c. 24 B.C.) Don't make wine into ditch water. (μὴ δεῖν τὸν οἶνόν τε πηλὴν ποιεῖν.)

ATHENAEUS, Deipnosophistai. Sec. 383C. (c. A.D. 200)

No blessing is to be pronounced over a cup of wine unless it has been first mixed with water.

Mishnah: Berachoth, vii, 5. (c. 200)

After hee hath well mingled water in his wyne, hee may chaunce to finde cause of repentance.

WILLIAM PAINTER, The Pallace of Pleasure, iii, 364. (1567)

Th' water hurteth, wyne maketh one sing. (L'aqua fa male, il vino fa cantare.)

JOHN FLORIO, Firste Fruites, fo. 31. (1578)

A cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in 't.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus, ii, 1, 52. (1607)

When flowing cups pass swiftly round

With no allaying Thames.

LOVELACE, To Althea from Prison. (c. 1650)

And Noah he often said to his wife when he sat down to dine,

"I don't care where the water goes if it doesn't get into the wine."

G. K. CHESTERTON, The Flying Inn. (1914)

6 Vilis saepe cadus nobile nectar habet: the best wine comes out of an old vessel.

ROBERT BURTON, The Anatomy of Melancholy, ii, iii, 2. (1621)

7 Where wine is not common, commons must be sent.

9 And for to drincken strong wyn, reed as blood.

CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 637. (c. 1386)

He drinks wine like a German—in the morning, neat; at dinner, without water; at supper, as it comes from the bottle.

F. E. HULME, Proverb Lore, p. 109. (1902) An Italian proverb.

10 The wine is the master's, the goodness is the drawer's.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 204. (1639) RAY, English Proverbs, p. 29. (1670)

Wine is the Vintner's; but the Goodness of it, the Drawer's.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5747. (1732)

1
"It wasn't the wine," murmured Mr. Snodgrass, in a broken voice. "It was the salmon." (Somehow or other, it never is the wine, in these cases.)

DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 8. (1836)

Fan the sinking flame of hilarity with the wing of friendship; and pass the rosy.

DICKENS, The Old Curiosity Shop. Ch. 7. (1841)

The last phrase repeated in later chapters.

2
For salable wine there is no need of hung-up ivy. (Vino vendibili suspensa hedera nihil opus.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. ii, cent. vi, No. 20.

(1523) Included by TAVERNER in his Translations from Erasmus, fo. 42, with the rendering, "Wyne that is saleable and goode nedeth no bushe or garland of vyne to be hanged before," and the comment, "The englyshe prouerbe is this: Good wyne nedeth no signe." The ivy was sacred to Bacchus, and so was hung above the door of wine shops. PONTANUS, Collectio Proverbiorum, p. 220. (1778)

Wine delicate, fresh and good,
Has no need of ivy or wisp of straw.

(Vin délicat, friant et bon N'a mestier lierre ne brandon.)

GABRIEL MEURIER, Trésor des Sentences. (c. 1550) Another French form recorded in Proverbes Communs is "À bon vin ne faut point d'enseigne" (For a good wine no sign-board is needed), and a third form is, "Le bon vin n'a point besoin bucheron."

The good wyne needeth none iuye garland.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE, The Glasse of Government.

SWIFT, Polite Conversation. Dial. ii. (1738)

You reprobate the ignorance of those writers who dignify wine with the appellation of old men's milk.

MALKIN, tr., Gil Blas. Bk. x, ch. 1. (1809)

A good drink makes the old young. (Ein guter Trunk, macht Alte jung.)

CAHIER, Six Mille Proverbes, p. 350. (1856)

<sup>3</sup> Heart-gladdening wine. (οἶνον ἐθφρονα.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. iii, l. 246. (c. 850 B. C.)

Pass not by the stranger with thy wine,

For it doubles the heart of thy companions.

AMEN-EM-APT, Teaching How to Live. Col. xxvi, l. 11. (c. 700 B. C.) Kevin, tr.

Wine that cheers the heart and rules the world.
(οἶνον ἐφροναον | ἀνθρώπων πύτανιν.)

ION OF CHIOS, Dithyrambs. Frag. 1. (c. 450 B. C.) Quoted by ATHENAEUS, ii, 35E.

Wine that maketh glad the heart of man. (Vinum bonum laetificet cor hominis.)

Old Testament: Psalms, civ, 15. (c. 250 B. C.)

Wine is as good as life to a man, if it be drunk moderately. . . . Measurably drunk and in season, it bringeth gladness of heart: but wine drunken with excess maketh bitterness of the mind. (ἀγαλλίαμα καρδίας καὶ εὐφροσύνη ψυχῆς οἶνος πινόμενος ἐν καιρῷ αὐτάρκειας.)

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom (Ecclesiasticus), xxxi, 27–29. (c. 190 B. C.) Paraphrased in the Babylonian Talmud: Joma, fo. 76b.

Wine, the cheerer of the heart,

And lively refresher of the countenance.

Wine's old prophetic aid.

MATTHEW GREEN, The Spleen, l. 326. (1737)

<sup>5</sup> He that is penniless is rich, and even the wealthy find their hearts expanding when they are smitten by the arrows of the vine. (ὃς μὲν ἀχρήμων, ἀφνεὸς τότε, τοὶ δ' αὖ πλουτεῖντες | δέονται φρένας ἀμπελίνους τόξοις δαμέντες.)

PINDAR, Eulogies: To Thrasylbulus, l. 8. (c. 480 B. C.) At about the same time, Bacchylides wrote (Jebb's edition, p. 418): "As the cups go swiftly round, a sweet subduing power warms the heart. . . . That power sends a man's thoughts soaring;—straightway he is stripping cities of their diadem of towers,—his halls gleam with gold and ivory;—over the sunlit sea his wheat-ships bring wealth untold from Egypt:—such are the raptures of the reveller's soul."

Than wine what could be more wonder-working?
Why, look you now; 'tis when men drink they thrive,

Grow wealthy, win success, are happy, help their friends.

(οἶνον γὰρ εὖροις ἄν τι πρακτικώτερον; ὁρᾷς; δταν πίνωσιν ἄνθρωποι, τότε πλουτοῦσι, διαπράττονσι, νικῶσιν δίκας, εὐδαιμονοῦσιν, ὠφελοῦσι τοὺς φίλους.)

ARISTOPHANES, The Knights, l. 91. (424 B. C.)
Give . . . wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more. (Date . . . vinum his, qui amaro sunt animo: bibant, et obliviscantur egestatis suae, et doloris sui non recordentur amplius.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxxi, 6. (c. 350 B. C.)
Who, after his wine, prates of poverty? (Quis post vina . . . pauperiem crepat?)

HORACE, Odes, Bk. i, ode 18, l. 5. (23 B. C.)

III—Wine a Curse

2
Chained by wine, one lives no life at all.
(φρένας οἶνος, οὐ δὴ τῆς.)

ALCAEUS, Frag. 82. EDMONDS, Lyra Graeca i, 374. (c. 595 B. C.)

Shew not thy valiaitness in wine; for wine hath destroyed many.

BEN SIRA, Book of Wisdom, xxxi, 23. (c. 190 B. C.)
That's the great evl in wine: it catches you by the feet, it's a cumping wrestler. (Pedes captat primum, luctator dñlosust.)

PLAUTUS, Pseudols, l. 1250. (c. 190 B. C.)
Wine mars beauty, wine spoils our prime. (Vino forma perit, vino crrumpitur aetas.)

PROPERTIUS, Eleges. Bk. ii, eleg. 33, l. 33. (c. 24 B. C.)

3
Wine is a terrible foe, hard to wrestle with.
(δεινὸς γὰρ οἶνος κα παλαιεσθαι βαρὺς.)

EURIPIDES, Cyclops, l. 678. (c. 440 B. C.)
How exceeding strong is wine! it causeth all men to err that drink it.

Apocrypha: I Esdras, iii, 18. (c. A. D. 90)

4
Wine-Counsels selcom prosper.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 811. (1640)
Counsel over cups is crazy.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 5. (1678)
The Counsels which are given in Wine,
Will do no good to thee, or thine.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6392. (1732)
Take counsel in wine, but resolve afterwards in water.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1733

5
Wine is a turn-coat, first a friend, then an enemy

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 928. (1640) FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5746. (1732)
Physic makes you first sick, and then well; wine first makes you well, and then sick.

HENRY FIELDING, Don Quixote in England. Act i, sc. 6. (1734)

Whoever is a friend of wine is an equal enemy of himself. (Quien es amigo del vino, enemigo es de si mismo.)

CAHIER, Six Mike Proverbs, p. 285. (1856)

6
Befooling wine, which sets one, even though he be right wise, to singing and laughing softly, and makes him stand up and dance, aye, and brings forth a word which were better unspoken. (οἶνος ἡλιό.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xlv, l. 463. (c. 850 B. C.)

Wine makes even an old man dance against his will. (οἶνος ἀνωγε γέροντα οὐκ ἐθέλοντα χορεύειν.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. ii, cent. iii, No. 19.

(1523) Erasmus gives the Latin, "Vinum senem etiam vel nolentem saltare compellit," or "ductare choreas" (makes him lead the dance), and adds that the point of the proverb is that there is nothing so silly or so foreign to his nature which a drunken man will not attempt. He cites another proverb from ATHENAEUS, bk. iv, "Abundant wine renders the sane insane."

Wine can of their wits the wise beguile,
Make the sage frolic, and the serious smile.

POPE, tr., Odyssey. Bk. xiv, l. 520. (1726)

1 Racked by wine and anger. (Vino tortus et ira.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 18, l. 38. (20 B.C.)

Thus induced to reveal another's secrets.

Wine kindles wrath. (Vinum incendit iram.)

SENECA, De Ira. Bk. ii, sec. 19. (c. A.D. 55)

Wine ends in blood.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging. (Luxuriosa res, vinum, et tumultuosa ebrietas.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xx, 1. (c. 350 B.C.)

Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? . . . They that tarry long at the wine. (Cui vae? cuius patri vae? cui rixae? . . . Nonne his, qui commorantur in vino.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxiii, 29, 30.

Look not thou upon the wine when it is red. (Ne intuearis vinum quando flavescit.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxiii, 31.

It [wine] biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. (Mordebit ut coluber, et sicut regulus venena diffundet.)

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxiii, 32.

3 Wine is the first weapon the devils use in attacking the young.

ST. JEROME, The Virgin's Profession. (c. 420)

O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee devil!

SHAKESPEARE, Othello, ii, 3, 283. (1605)

Wine makes old wives wenches.

JOHN CLARKE, Paroemiologia, p. 192. (1639)

Wine is a poison which bores through the bowels, Lechery is a knife which scrapes the bones (Chiu shih ch'uan ch'ang tu yao, sé nai kua ku kang tao.)

WILLIAM SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 1000. (1875)

4 Wine hath drowned more men than the sea.

NICHOLAS LING, comp., Politeuphuia, p. 299. (1669) FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5744. (1732)

Bacchus hath drowned more Men than Neptune.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 830. (1732)

The Germans say, "Im Becher ersaufen mehr als in Meer" (More men are drowned in the wine-cup than in the ocean), also, "More men are drowned in wine than in water."

5 There is a devil in every berry of the grape.

MOHAMMED, The Koran. Ch. 2. (c. 625)

He rails bitterly against Bacchus, and swears there's a devil in every berry of the grape.

JAMES HOWELL, Letters. Sec. vii, let. 3. (1647)

Make good the doctrine of the Turks,
That in each grape a devil lurks.

T. WEAVER, Commendatory Verses. (1649) Ir.

WALTON, The Compleat Angler.

Perhaps every one has not heard the proverb "There is a devil in every berry of the grape."

This proverb is in use in some parts of England, and is said to have strayed hither from Turkey

IV—Wine In, Secrets Out

6 Wine has no rudder. (τὸν οἶνον οὐκ ἔχειν πηδάλια.)

ATHENAEUS, Deipnosophistai. (c. A.D. 200) The last word is also used metaphorically for reins or bridle. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, iii, 18, with the Latin, "Vinum caret clavo."

Wine wears no breeches.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 7. (1659)

D'ISRAELI, Curiosities of Literature: Philosophy of Proverbs, cites the Spanish proverb from which the English is derived, "El vino no trae bragas," and adds, "for men in wine expose their most secret thoughts."

When wine has giv'n indecent language birth

COWPER, Conversation, l. 263. (1781)

7 Wine overshadows thought. (οἶνος τῷ φρονεῖν ἐπισκοτεῖ.)

EUBULUS, Fragments. Frag. 11. (c. 375 B.C.)

It has passed into a proverb that wisdom is clouded by wine. (In proverbium cessit sapientiam vino obumbrari.)

PLINY THE ELDER, Naturalis Historia. Bk. xxiii, ch. 1, sec. 23. Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, ii, ii, 61, and condensed to "Sapientia vino obumbratur" (Wit is clouded by wine).

Ther dronkennesse regneth in any route.
Ther is no conseil hid, with-outen doute.

CHAUCER, Man of Law's Tale, l. 678. (c. 1386)

Dronkennesse is verray sepulture
Of mannes wit and his discrecioun,

In whom that drinke hath dominacioun,

He can no conseil kepe, it is no drede,

Now kepe yow fro the whyte and fro the rede

CHAUCER, The Pardoner's Tale, l. 232.

For wher that wyn doth wit awei,

Wisdom hath loste the rihte weie.

Wine within, wit without. (Vin dentro, senno fuora.)

ROBERT BLAND, Proverbs. Vol. i, p. 156. (1814)

A Spanish proverb. The Germans say it in two words, "Voll, toll" (Full, mad). The Italians say, "Dove entra il vino, esce la vergogna" (Where wine enters, modesty exits), or "Dove entra il bere, se n'esce il sapere" (Where drink enters, wit exits), the same form used by the Danes.

When the rum is in, the wit is out.

TIMOTHY SHAY ARTHUR, Ten Nights in a Bar-room. Night vii, p. 142. (1854)

1
The truthful god of free speech unlocks the heart's secrets. (Condita cum verax aperit praecordia Liber.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. iv, l. 89. (35 B.C.)
Liber, the Liberator, was identified with Bacchus.

Thou [wine] unlockest the thoughts of the wise and their secret purpose by merry Bacchus' spell. (Tu sapientium | curas et arcanum iocoso | consilium retegis Lyaeo.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iii, ode xxi, l. 14. (23 B.C.)
Quoted by MONTAIGNE, ii, 2, the French being, "Dans tes joyeux transports, O Bacchus! le sage se laisse arracher son secret."

Excess of wine unlocks secrets. (Ebrietas operta recludit.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 5, l. 16. (20 B.C.)

When wine goes in, secrets come out.

Babylonian Talmud: Erubin, fo. 65b; Sanhedrin, fo. 38a. (c. 450)

When wine enters, the secret comes out.

Midrash: Numbers Rabbah, x, 8. (c. 625) There is a play here not possible to translate, for the numerical value of the letters of "yayin" (wine) is seventy, exactly the same as for "sod" (secret). See also Midrash Tanchumah: Sheminee.

Wine unbungs the most intimate secrets of those who drink too much of it. (Le vin faict desbonder les plus intimes secrets à ceulx qui en ont prins outre mesure.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 2. (1580)

Wine in excess neither keeps secrets nor fulfils promises. (El vino demasiado ni guarda secreto ni cumple palabra.)

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 43. (1615)

Whosoever loveth wine shall not be trusted of any man, for he cannot keep a secret.

SIR WALTER RALEGH, Instructions to His Son.

Sec. ix. (1616) In the same section Raleigh quotes Innocentius as saying, "There is no secrecy where drunkenness rules. Whom have not plentiful cups made eloquent?"

When wine sinks, words swim.

JAMES KELLY, Scottish Proverbs, p. 354. (1721)

FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5622. (1732) The French say, "Lorsque le vin descend, les paroles remontant" (When wine goes down, words come up).

Wine is a revealer of secrets. (Chiu fa hsin fu chih yen.)

SCARBOROUGH, Chinese Proverbs. No. 999. (1875)

2
Kings, we are told, ply with many a bumper and test with wine the men they are anxious to see through. (Reges dicuntur multis urgere culullis | et torquere mero, quem perspexisse laborent.)

HORACE, De Arte Poetica, l. 434. (c. 20 B.C.)

There, with the wine before you, you will tell of many things. (Illic adposito narrabis multa Lyaeo.)

V—In Vino Veritas

3
Wine, my dear boy, and truth. (οἶνος, ὦ φίλε παῖ, καὶ ἀλήθεια.)

ALCAEUS, Fragments. Frag. 126 Loeb. (c. 600 B.C.) SCHOLIAST on PLATO, Symposium, 217E, says, "Wine and truth (οἶνος καὶ ἀλήθεια), a saying used of those who speak the truth when drunk; and it is the beginning of a song in Alcaeus." Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vii, 17, who gives the Latin, "In vino veritas." It is sometimes given as Alcaeus gives it, "Vinum et veritas." See EDMONDS, Lyra Graeca, i, 399.

Wine, as the saying goes, is truthful. (τὸ λεγόμενον, οἶνος ἦν ἀληθής.)

PLATO, Symposium. Sec. 217E. (c. 380 B.C.)

Wine and truth goes the saying, lad. (οἶνος ὦ φίλε παῖ λέγεται καὶ ἀλήθεια.)

THEOCRITUS, Idyls. Idyl xxix, l. 1. (c. 270 B.C.)

It has become a common proverb that in wine there is truth. (Vulgoque veritas iam attributa vino est.)

PLINY, Naturalis Historia. Bk. xiv, sec. 141. (A.D. 77)

In wine is the truth hidden. (En vin est vérité cachée.)

RABELAIS, Pantagruel. Bk. v, ch. 45. (1552) The French also say, "Après bon vin, parole sincère" (After good wine, truthful word); the Germans, "Im Rausch spricht man die Wahrheit" (In drink a man speaks the truth). "Fair fa' guid drink," say the Scots, "for it gars folk speak as they think."

This Proverbe is verified, Truth is in wine.

STEFANO GUAZZO, Civile Conversation. Bk. iv, p. 155. (1574) Young, tr.

I perceiue sober men tell most lies, for in vino veritas.

JOHN LYL, Mother Bombie. (c. 1590) Works (Bond), iii, 199.

Wine telleth truth and should not be belied.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Mentir. (1611) Grant but the adage true that truth's in wine.

THOMAS PECKE, Parnassi Puerperium, p. 5. (1659)

When the Wine enters, out goes the Truth.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard's Almanack, 1755.

I had recourse to the maxim, in vino veritas, a man who is well warmed with wine will speak truth.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. BOSWELL, Life. (1772)

In wine there's truth, they say.

PAULDING, The Bucktails. Act iii, sc. 2. (1815)

Wine in truth out.

DICKENS, Nicholas Nickleby. Ch. 27. (1839)

There is no saying truer than that . . . there is truth in wine. Wine . . . has the merit of forcing a man to show his true colours.

TROLLOPE, He Knew He Was Right, ch. 51. (1869)

A firm believer in that old 'In vino veritas' saw.

GEORGE BAGBY, Red Is for Killing, p. 166. (1941)

We had a clear case of in vino veritas.

NGAIO MARSH, Death in Ecstasy, p. 146. (1941)

When the drink goes in the truth comes out.

HUGH ADDIS, Night Over the Wood, p. 60. (1943)

1 Wine is a spying-hole into a man. (οἶνος ἀνθρώποις δίοπτρον.)

ALCAEUS, Fragments. Frag. 169, Loeb. (c. 600 B.C.) Quoted by TZETZES on Lycophron: "Drunken people disclose the secrets of the mind, and this is why Alcaeus says, "Wine is a spying-hole into a man." See EDMONDS, Lyra Graeca, i, 425.

Wine shews what a Man is. Wine washes off the Dawb.

FULLER, Gnomologia. Nos. 5749, 5752. (1732)

It is most absurdly said, in popular language, of any man, that he is disguised in liquor; for, on the contrary, most men are disguised by sobriety.

THOMAS DE QUINCEY, Confessions of an English Opium-Eater. (1822)

2 Drunkards speak the truth. (Vera dicunt ebrios.)

EPHIPPIUS, Fragment. (c. 350 B.C.) As quoted by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vii, 17. The Spaniards say, "La Verdad está en el vino"; the French, "Dans le vin on dit la vérité."

3 If wine tells truth,—and so have said the wise,—

It makes me laugh to think how brandy lies!

O. W. HOLMES, The Banker's Secret, i. 161. (1850)

The old proverb "In wine there is truth" might with equal propriety be applied to brandy.

A. H. NORWAY, H. & B. in Devon, p. 52. (1897)

4 There is no deceit in a brimmer.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 3. (1678)

5 In the fire are gold and silver tested by cunning men, but wine is the revealer of a man's heart. (ἀνδρός δ' οἶνος ἔδειξε νόον.)

THEOGNIS, Elegies, l. 499. (c. 600 B.C.) ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vii, 17, gives the Latin, "Vinum hominis prodens arguit ingenium."

The mirror for the face is bronze, but wine for the heart. (κάτοπτρον γὰρ εἶδος χαλκός ἐστ', οἶνος δὲ νοῦ.)

AESCHYLUS, Fragments. Frag. 393N. (c. 458 B.C.)

What is in a man's heart when he is sober is on his tongue when he is drunk, as those who are given to proverbs say. (ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ τοῦ νήφοντος ἐπὶ τῆς γλώττης ἐστὶ τοῦ μεθύοντος.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: On Garrulity. Sec. 503F.

(c. A.D. 95) Cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, vii, 17, who gives the Latin, "Quicquid in pectore conditum est, in apertum proferre," and quotes a line from Euripides, "Wine betrays the heart."

The thyng that lyeth in a sobre mans harte, is in the tonge of the dronkarde. (Quod in corde sobrii, id est in lingua ebrii.)

450) "Wine leads both man and woman to adultery." R.,—Numbers: Rabbah, x, 4.

2
Money, wine, and women, have good and bad things in them.

RANDLE COTGRAVE, Dictionary: Argent. (1611)

Woman, money, and wine, have their good and their pine.

JOHN WODROEPHE, *The Spared Hours of a
Souldier*, p. 484. (1623) The French say,
"Femme, argent, et vin, Ont leur bien et leur venin" (Women, money and wine have their pleasure and their poison).

I believe in women, wine, whiskey, and war.

J. A. McDUGALL, Speech, U.S. Senate, Feb., 1861.

3
No more enticing combination is possible:
night, woman, wine. (Istoc inlecebrosius | fieri nil potest: nox mulier vinum.)

PLAUTUS, Bacchides, l. 87. (190 B.C.)

I'll sweeten my life with pleasure and wine and love. (Voluptate, vino et amore delectavero.)

PLAUTUS, Mercator, l. 548. (c. 200 B.C.)

Let us have wine and women, mirth and laughter,
Sermons and soda-water the day after.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, sc. 178. (1818)

4
Wine, women and song. (πότους καὶ γυναῖκα καὶ τὸ ἄγπεν.)

PLUTARCH, Moralia: How to Tell a Flatterer,
52D. (c. A. D. 95)

Who loves not women, wine, and song,

Remains a fool his whole life long.

(Wer nicht liebt Weiber, Wein, und Gesang, Der bleibt ein Narr sein Lebenslang.)

JOHANN HEINRICH VOSS (?) On the authority of BÜCHMANN, Geflügelte Worte, who says that Voss printed the couplet in the Mu-senalmanack, Hamburg, in 1777. REDLICH,
Die Poetischen die Geisterkeller, states that Voss included the couplet in a collection of his poems. It is usually ascribed to Martin Luther, without any authority, except a slightly similar passage in his Table-Talk
(No. 728.) It was attributed to Luther by Th.
Weyler, who changed Weiber (women) to

Weib (wife) in order to make the verse a little more decorous.

Then sing, as Martin Luther sang.

As Doctor Martin Luther sang:

"Who loves not wine, woman, and song,

He is a fool his whole life long."

THACKERAY, Adventures of Philip. Ch. 7. (1862)

<sup>10</sup> It is shameful for the wise to persist in error. (σοφῷ γὰρ αἰσχρὸν ἐκαμάρτανειν.)

AESCHYLUS, Prometheus, l. 1039. (c. 470 B.C.)

ARISTIPPUS, when Dionysius inquired why philosophers go to rich men's houses, while rich men no longer visit philosophers. (c. 400 B.C.)
See DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Aristippus, ii, 69.

It was asked of the sage: Who are superior, the wise or the rich? The wise, was his reply. But why, objected the querist, are the wise more frequently at the door of the rich, than the rich at the door of the wise? Because, rejoined he, the wise know the value of riches, but the rich do not know the value of wisdom.

SALOMON IBN GABIROL, Mibhar ha-Peninin (Choice of Pearls). No. 36. (c. 1050) Ascher, tr. Paraphrasing Aristippus.

They axed hym wherefore the wiese man stode more atte yates of the riche man than the riche man atte yates of the wiese man? And he answered, the wiese man knoweth the prouffit of the riche and the riche knoweth not the prouffit of the sciencial wiese man.

EARL RIVERS, tr., Dictes and Sayenges of the Philosophirs, fo. 16. (1477) Attributed by Rivers to Hermes.

What is it to be wise?

'Tis but to know how little can be known.

POPE, An Essay on Man. Epis. iv, l. 260. (1734)

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom: he that thinks himself the happiest man, really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest is generally the greatest fool.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. i, No. 326. (1820)

Wisdom hath one foot on land, and another on Sea.

HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 613. (1640)

A wise man cares not for what he cannot have

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. No. 664.

Wise men care not for what they cannot have.

FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5775. (1732)

Ye are wise inough (quoth he) if ye keepe ye warme.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. II, ch. 2. (1546)

Thou art a mery fellowe and wise.

And if thou kepe thy selfe warme.

Marriage of Wit and Wisdom, p. 16. (1579)

Am I not wise?—Yes, keep you warm.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew, ii, 1, 268. (1594)

If he have wit enough to keep himself warm.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, i, 1, 68. (1598)

He's wisest that keeps himself warmest.

UNKNOWN, The Puritaine. Act iii, sc. 6. (1607)

In a scrivener's furred gown, which shews he is no fool:

For therein he hath wit enough to keep himself warm.

JONSON, Bartholomew Fayre. Act v, sc.3. (1614)

He is wise enough that can keep himself warm.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 28. (1670)

He is wise, that hath Wit enough for his own Affairs.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 1954. (1732)

Understanding all the wisdom of old. (παλαιά τε πολλά τε εἰδώς.)

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. vii, l. 157. (c. 850 B.C.)

With . . . a profound reverence for the wisdom of our ancestors.

EDMUND BURKE, Conciliation with America.

(1775) Lord Brougham states that the first user of the phrase was Sir Francis Bacon, but it has not been found in his works. Burke had used it before in his Thoughts on the Present Discontents. (1770)

It does not matter one whit whether you lack wisdom teeth if you only possess wisdom.

E. A. HOOTEN, Twilight of Man, p. 224. (1939)

The wise man is inferior to Jove alone, rich, free, honored, beautiful, nay a king of kings. (Sapiens uno minor est Iove, dives, liber, honoratus, pulcher, rex denique regum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 1. l. 106. (20 B.C.)

The sage alone is king. (μόνον τὸν σοφὸν βασιλεύει.)

PHILO, De Mutatione Nominum. Sec. 152. (c. A.D. 40) This Stoic dictum is repeated by Philo in De Sobr., 57; De Mig., 197; and De Som., ii, 244.

When the king dies, long live the king. When the wise man dies, it is not so easy to replace him.

Midrash: Numbers Rabbah, 6. (c. 625)

It is profitable to cast aside toys and to learn wisdom. (Sapere est abiectis utile nugis.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, epis. 2, l. 141. (c. 20 B.C.)

Defer not till to-morrow to be wise,

To-morrow's sun on thee may never rise.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, Letter to Cobham. (c. 1700)

Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer.

An abnormally wise man. (Abnormis sapiens.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. ii, sat. 2, l. 3. (35 B.C.)

No man could be so wise as Thurlow looked.

CHARLES JAMES FOX, of Lord Chancellor Edward Thurlow. (c. 1800) See CAMPBELL, Lives of the Chancellors, v, 661. Carlyle applied the phrase to Daniel Webster.

You look wise. Pray correct that error.

LAMB, Essays of Elia: All Fools' Day. (1823)

Stertinius, eighth of the wise men. (Stertinius, sapientum octavus.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. ii, sat. 3, l. 296. (35 B.C.)

Stertinius was a philosopher who is said to have written 220 volumes on Stoicism. Naturally, none of them survives. Horace is adding one to the famous seven wise men of Greece, who lived about 600 B.C. The lists vary, but all include Solon, Thales, Pittacus of Mitylene, and Bias of Priene. "An eighth wise man" passed into a proverb, and is cited by ERASMUS, Adagia, i, viii, 90. CICERO, De Legibus, ii, 11, calls Thales, "Sapientissimus in septem" (The wisest of the seven).

A third Cato. (Tertius Cato.)

ERASMUS, Adagia. Chil. i, cent. viii, No. 89. (1523)

The two Catos, who were in their time models of wisdom, virtue and patriotism, were in such high esteem among the Romans that they even believed they had been sent into the world by the gods. To compare anyone therefore to them, or to call him a third Cato, would have been the highest compliment that could have been paid to any human.

ROBERT BLAND, Proverbs, i, 187. (1814)

A Daniel, still say I, a second Daniel!

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice. Act iv, sc. i, l. 340. Gratiano is referring to Portia's argument against Shylock, and comparing it with Daniel's arraignment of the elders in what is, perhaps, the world's first detective story, The History of Susanna, which will be found in the Apocrypha, and which has furnished a theme for so many painters of the nude. Many other famous figures of history have taken their places in similar proverbs: "A second Solomon," either for a wise man or for a clever judge; "A second Judas," for a traitor; "A second Ulysses," for a cunning man; "A second Hercules," for a strong man; "A second Barnum," for a good liar, and so on. A number of minor women poets have been (mistakenly) called "The eighth Muse."

Some are wise, and some are otherwise.

JAMES HOWELL, English Proverbs, p. 1. (1659) RAY, p. 143; SWIFT, Dial. i.

Some folks are wise, and some are otherwise
